Rules

Crim. LR 32.1 2, 8, 9

Pursuant to the public right of access guaranteed by the First Amendment of the United States Constitution and the common law, Civil Beat Law Center for the Public Interest (Law Center) moves to unseal the redacted sentencing memorandum filed by Defendant Minh-Hung Nguyen [Dkt. 989] in United States v. Kealoha, Cr. No. 17-00582 JMS-WRP.

The positions taken by Defendant Nguyen advocating for adjustments or departures from the guidelines calculations or seeking to influence the Court concerning sentencing factors should not be shielded from public view. The adjudication of criminal justice in this case should not be obscured; the “penal structure is the least visible, least understood, and least effective part of the justice system.” CBS, Inc. v. U.S. Dist. Ct., 765 F.2d 823, 826 (9th Cir. 1985) (government not permitted to hide its position supporting or opposing motion to reduce sentence).

I. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

On June 27, 2019, a jury returned guilty verdicts for the former Chief of the Honolulu Police Department, a senior deputy prosecuting attorney for the City and County of Honolulu, and Defendant Nguyen and another police officer in an elite criminal investigation unit. The jury convicted the defendants of conspiring to obstruct justice by framing a man for a crime that he did not commit.

On March 12, 2020, Defendant Nguyen filed a sentencing memorandum under seal [Dkt. 981]. On April 14, he filed a redacted version of the sentencing memorandum [Dkt. 989]. Although redacted from the sentencing memorandum [Dkt. 989 at PageID#12302], Defendant Nguyen presumably relied on Rule 32.1(j) of the Criminal Local Rules of Practice for the United States District Court for the District of Hawaii to justify redacting portions of the sentencing memorandum.

II. THE PUBLIC HAS A PRESUMED CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT OF ACCESS TO RECORDS OF CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS.

The constitutional right of public access to criminal proceedings is among those rights that, “while not unambiguously enumerated in the very terms of the [First] Amendment, are nonetheless necessary to the enjoyment of other First Amendment rights.” Globe Newspaper Co. v. Superior Ct., 457 U.S. 596, 604 (1982). “A major purpose of that Amendment was to protect the free discussion of governmental affairs.” Id.; Richmond Newspapers, Inc. v. Virginia, 448 U.S. 555, 575 (1980) (plurality opinion) (the freedoms in the First Amendment “share a common core purpose of assuring freedom of communication on matters relating to the functioning of government”). Thus, to the extent that the constitution guarantees a qualified right of public access, “it is to ensure that this constitutionally protected ‘discussion of governmental affairs’ is an informed one.” Globe Newspaper, 457 U.S. at 605; Richmond Newspapers, 448 U.S. at 587 (Brennan, J., concurring) (“Implicit in this structural role is not only the principle that debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open, but also the antecedent assumption that valuable public debate – as well as other civic behavior – must be informed.”).

“By offering such protection, the First Amendment serves to ensure that the individual citizen can effectively participate in and contribute to our republican system of self-government.” Globe Newspaper, 457 U.S. at 604. “[T]he public has an intense need and a deserved right to know about the administration of justice in general; about the prosecution of local crimes in particular; about the conduct of the judge, the prosecutor, defense counsel, police officers, other public servants, and all the actors in the judicial arena; and about the trial itself.” Richmond Newspapers, 448 U.S. at 604 (Blackmun, J., concurring). “[Openness] gave assurance that the proceedings were conducted fairly to all concerned, and it discouraged perjury, the misconduct of participants, and decisions based on secret bias or partiality.” Id. at 569; accord Press-Enter. Co. v. Superior Ct., 464 U.S. 501, 508 (1984) [Press-Enter. I] (“[T]he sure knowledge that anyone is free to attend gives assurance that established procedures are being followed and that deviations will become known.”).

“A result considered untoward may undermine public confidence, and where the trial has been concealed from public view an unexpected outcome can cause a reaction that the system at best has failed and at worst has been corrupted.” Richmond Newspapers, 448 U.S. at 571 (plurality); Globe Newspaper, 457 U.S. at 606 (“[P]ublic access to the criminal trial fosters an appearance of fairness, thereby heightening public respect for the judicial process.”); Press-Enter. I, 464 U.S. at 508 (“Openness thus enhances both the basic fairness of the criminal trial and the appearance of fairness so essential to public confidence in the system.”). “People in an open society do not demand infallibility from their institutions, but it is difficult for them to accept what they are prohibited from observing.” Richmond Newspapers, 448 U.S. at 572 (plurality opinion);

The same First Amendment standards for closing courtroom proceedings apply to sealing documents for criminal pretrial proceedings.

E.g., Associated Press v. U.S. Dist. Ct., 705 F.2d 1143, 1145 (9th Cir. 1983). As the Ninth Circuit has observed:

There is no reason to distinguish between pretrial proceedings and the documents filed in regard to them. Indeed, the two principal justifications for the first amendment right of access to criminal proceedings apply, in general, to pretrial documents. Those two justifications are: “first, the criminal trial historically has been open to the press and general public,” and “second, the right of access to criminal trials plays a particularly significant role in the functioning of the judicial process and the government as a whole.” There can be little dispute that the press and public have historically had a common law right of access to most pretrial documents – though not to some, such as transcripts of grand jury proceedings. . . . We thus find that the public and press have a first amendment right of access to pretrial documents in general.

Id. (citations omitted).

To preserve societal values reflected in the First Amendment, the U.S. Supreme Court held that “[c]losed proceedings, although not absolutely precluded, must be rare and only for cause shown that outweighs the value of openness.” Press-Enter. I, 464 U.S. at 509. “The presumption of openness may be overcome only by an overriding interest based on findings that closure is essential to preserve higher values and is narrowly tailored to serve that interest.” Id. at 510; accord Globe Newspaper, 457 U.S. at 606-07.

When the First Amendment right of access applies, “[i]t is the burden of the party seeking closure . . . to present facts supporting closure and to demonstrate that available alternatives will not protect his rights.”

Oregonian Publ'g Co. v. U.S. Dist. Ct., 920 F.2d 1462, 1467 (9th Cir. 1990).

Defendant Nyugen thus has the burden to prove that: “(1) closure serves a compelling interest; (2) there is a substantial probability that, in the absence of closure, this compelling interest would be harmed; and (3) there are no alternatives to closure that would adequately protect the compelling interest.” Phoenix Newspapers, Inc. v. U.S. Dist. Ct., 156 F.3d 940, 949 (9th Cir. 1998). The findings may not be based on “conclusory assertions.” Id.

III. THE PUBLIC ALSO HAS A PRESUMED COMMON LAW RIGHT OF ACCESS TO RECORDS OF CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS.

The Ninth Circuit has recognized a few judicially filed criminal records that are not subject to the common law right of access “because the records have traditionally been kept secret for important policy reasons.” United States v. Bus. of the Custer Battlefield Museum & Store, 658 F.3d 1188, 1192 (9th Cir. 2011) [Custer Battlefield]. Those categorically exempt records include grand jury transcripts and warrant materials during pre-indictment investigation. Id. For all other judicial records, “a strong presumption in favor of access is the starting point.” Id. at 1194.

For the common law analysis, the “party seeking to seal a judicial record then bears the burden of overcoming this strong presumption by . . .

articulating compelling reasons . . . that outweigh the general history of access and the public policies favoring disclosure.” Id. at 1194-95. A court presented with a motion to seal must balance the competing interests and “base its decision on a compelling reason and articulate the factual basis for its ruling, without relying on hypothesis or conjecture.” Id. at 1195. “[T]he court may not restrict access to the documents without articulating both a compelling reason and a factual basis for its ruling.” Id. at 1196.

IV. THE PUBLIC HAS A RIGHT TO ACCESS SENTENCING MEMORANDA.

The Ninth Circuit has long recognized that the public rights of access extend to sentencing proceedings and related documents. CBS, Inc. v. U.S. Dist. Ct., 765 F.2d 823, 825 (9th Cir. 1985); accord U.S. Indus., Inc. v. U.S. Dist. Ct., 345 F.2d 18, 22-23 (9th Cir. 1965) (pre-Press Enterprise case requiring unsealing of sentencing statement with redactions to protect the identity of grand jury witnesses); see also United States v. Rivera, 682 F.3d 1223, 1228 (9th Cir. 2012) (articulating the value of open proceedings for sentencing).

As then-Judge Kennedy explained:

We find no principled basis for affording greater confidentiality to post-trial documents and proceedings than is given to pretrial matters. The primary justification for access to criminal proceedings, first that criminal trials historically have been open to the press and to the public, and, second, that access to criminal trials plays a significant role in the functioning of the judicial process and the governmental system, apply with as much force to post-conviction proceedings as to the trial itself.

CBS, Inc., 823 F.2d at 825 (citation omitted); see also United States v. Harris, 890 F.3d 480, 492 (4th Cir. 2018) (public right of access to sentencing memoranda); United States v. Kravetz, 706 F.3d 47, 56-59 (1st Cir. 2013) (sentencing memoranda and support letters); United States v. Ochoa-Vasquez, 428 F.3d 1015 (11th Cir. 2005) (sentencing memoranda); United States v. Alcantara, 396 F.3d 189, 196-99 (2d Cir. 2005) (sentencing hearing).

Here, Defendant Nguyen redacted the headings and lengthy portions of his argument for a reduced sentence under the Sentencing Guidelines. Dkt. 989 at PageID#12311-16. Those portions of the sentencing memorandum fall squarely within the public rights of access. Contrary to the procedural protections for those rights of access, no adequate justification has been provided for sealing the documents.

V. CONFIDENTIALITY CONCERNS FOR PRESENTENCE REPORTS DO NOT JUSTIFY REDACTING DEFENDANT'S SENTENCING ARGUMENTS.

Criminal LR 32.1(j) provides: "Filings that disclose the contents of the proposed or completed presentence report, including but not limited to sentencing statements, are to be filed under seal." To the extent that this Rule permits redacting legal and factual arguments in sentencing memoranda solely because those arguments are referenced in a presentence report, its constitutionality would be dubious in light of the standards outlined here. E.g., Globe Newspaper, 457 U.S. at 607-11 (state statute unconstitutional for mandating that all trial testimony by minor victims of sex crimes be closed to the public); Del. Coal. for Open Gov't, Inc. v. Strine, 733 F.3d 510, 520-21 (3d Cir. 2013) (state court rule unconstitutional for mandating confidentiality for government-sponsored arbitrations); see also In re Express-News Corp., 695 F.2d 807, 809-11 (5th Cir. 1982) (local district rule unconstitutional for prohibiting public access to jurors regarding deliberations or verdict without leave of the court).

Nothing in Fed. R. Crim. P. 32, nor 18 U.S.C. § 3552, requires secrecy for presentence reports.¹ United States v. Schlette, 842 F.2d 1574, 1578-79, amended, 854 F.2d 359 (9th Cir. 1988). But even when a general rule of confidentiality applies – as with grand jury testimony under Fed. R. Crim. P. 6(e) – the Ninth Circuit has held that the standards for public access require a carefully tailored response that directly addresses a specific need for confidentiality. U.S. Indus., 345 F.2d at 22 (relevant interests behind the anonymity of grand jury testimony may be protected in sentencing statement by redacting the identity of testifying witnesses and “any other action which best will maintain the document’s substance while protecting the anonymity of the witnesses”).

The Law Center is not seeking to unseal Defendant Nguyen’s presentence report [Dkt. 964], only those portions of the sentencing memorandum that apparently reference the presentence report. But the Ninth Circuit’s analysis for disclosing presentence reports in Schlette is informative because the Court of Appeals was clear that the general notion of confidentiality for presentence reports is not absolute.²

guidelines range.” Criminal LR 32.1(f). Courts cannot permit parties to substitute robust publicly accessible sentencing memoranda with confidential presentence report statements.

² Because the Ninth Circuit required disclosure of the Schlette presentence reports pursuant to the common law right of access, it did not reach the question of First Amendment access, which is the relevant standard here

Factual and legal justifications that a defendant puts before this Court to advocate for leniency in sentencing should be accessible for the public to understand the operation of the criminal justice system and the sentencing process. Id. at 1582-83 (access to presentence report justified by desire “to publish information that bears on the workings of the criminal justice system”). As the Schlette court remarked, there is a legitimate interest in explaining to a concerned public the means by which sentencing decisions are made. Making the public aware of how the criminal justice system functions surely serves the ends of justice. Publishing sufficient information to allow the public to join in a dialogue about the courts and the treatment of defendants can only have a positive impact on the public’s perception of our judicial system.

Id. at 1583; accord Berry v. Dep’t of Justice, 733 F.2d 1343, 1352 (9th Cir. 1984)

(“occasional disclosure [of presentence reports] to third parties is both inevitable and desirable.”). The Schlette court rejected arguments for the confidentiality of presentence reports based on “sources of confidential information” drying up, preventing retaliation for information disclosed, and detrimental impact on the quality of the presentence reports. 842 F.2d for analyzing access to sentencing memorandum. 842 F.2d at 1582 & n.4 (“we do not reach the newspapers’ first amendment argument.”).

at 1580. The Ninth Circuit explained that those arguments have “been proven empirically false.” Id.

In any event, the Law Center’s motion does not concern the type of information that should be kept confidential under any rationale. The Law Center is seeking Defendant Nguyen’s advocacy concerning sentencing—position statements about sentencing factors, guideline adjustments, and departures. E.g., CBS, Inc., 765 F.2d at 826 (“The government and the trial court here went so far as to assert that the government’s interests would be threatened if even its position of support or opposition to the [sentence reduction] motion were made known. That idea is as remarkable as it is meritless.”); Kravetz, 706 F.3d at 56 (“the substance of the parties’ arguments for or against an outcome, are clearly relevant to a studied determination of what constitutes reasonable punishment.”).

Moreover, even if there were a confidentiality concern—there is not—the balance under the common law analysis in Schlette favors disclosure in light of the justifiably intense public scrutiny on this case. News media referred to this case as part of “Honolulu’s largest-ever public corruption investigation.”³ The high level of public interest in the case required the Court to take the unprecedented step of holding initial jury selection for 400 prospective jurors in an exhibition hall, as well as making other accommodations, e.g., an overflow courtroom for viewing the trial. E.g., Manolo Morales, Blaisdell Center Set for Kealoha Trial (May 9, 2019) (“Experts say this is unprecedented, to have jury selection done outside of the courtroom because of such a large jury pool.”). The public rightfully has a keener interest and need for transparency concerning a conspiracy that turned the full weight of state and federal law enforcement against an innocent man. The convictions toppled highly ranked public officials who led Honolulu’s criminal justice system for years.

As the Ninth Circuit observed in Schlette: “in the face of a showing of a reasonable basis for disclosure, confidentiality cannot rest on some general rationale that has been proven empirically false, or on some reason for nondisclosure which we have determined to be an inappropriate basis for maintaining confidentiality.” 842 F.2d at 1583. Nothing justifies hiding Defendant Nguyen’s arguments for a reduced sentence in his sentencing memorandum.

CONCLUSION

Based on the foregoing, the Law Center respectfully moves this Court to unseal Defendant Nguyen’s redacted sentencing memorandum [Dkt. 989].
