Case Number: _____

COMPLAINT FOR INJUNCTIVE RELIEF

DEMAND FOR JURY TRIAL

1. Plaintiffs SurvJustice, Inc., Equal Rights Advocates, and Victim Rights Law Center bring this action against Defendants U.S. Department of Education (“the Department” or “the agency”), Secretary Elisabeth DeVos, and Acting Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights Candice Jackson seeking vacatur of the Department’s new policy, as expressed in a Dear Colleague Letter

1 and Question and Answers guidance issued on September 22, 2017 (hereinafter jointly referred
2 to as the “2017 Title IX policy”), concerning Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972
3 (“Title IX”).

4 2. Over 45 years ago, Congress enacted Title IX to prohibit discrimination on the basis of 5 sex in educational programs and activities receiving federal financial assistance (hereinafter
6 “recipients” or “educational institutions”). This landmark civil rights law has helped fight sex 7 discrimination and promote equal educational access and opportunities for girls and women from 8 the classroom to the playing field.

9 3. Twenty years ago, acting on the basis of Supreme Court decisions and the recognition
10 that Title IX’s promise of equality is hollow if a student can be subjected to sexual harassment
11 with impunity, the Department issued its first guidance to educational institutions (both K-12 12 schools and institutions of higher education) on the standards that govern their response to sexual 13 harassment, a form of sex discrimination. Since then, through several successive guidance
14 materials issued under Administrations led by both political parties, the Department has 15 reaffirmed that Title IX’s prohibition on sex discrimination requires recipients to prevent and 16 redress sex and gender-based harassment. These policies recognize that students who experience
17 sexual harassment, including in its most extreme form, sexual violence, suffer not only 18 physically and emotionally, but also in their ability to participate in and benefit from educational 19 opportunities, on the basis of their sex.

20 4. The reaffirmation of Title IX’s protections continued until September 2017, when the 21 Department formally rescinded sexual violence guidance documents issued in 2011 and 2014—
22 purportedly because they were issued without notice and comment—and issued new conflicting 23
24
25
26
27
28

1 policy documents to educational institutions—without notice and comment.¹ The 2017 Title IX
2 policy is substantively unlawful and procedurally deficient. It conflicts with existing Title IX
3 requirements and fails to provide a reasoned justification for its reversal in position. It is also 4 based on a legally and factually mistaken view that earlier guidance limited due process
5 protections for students. And in issuing the 2017 Title IX policy, the Department failed to take 6 into account reliance interests that students, and organizations like Plaintiffs that work with 7 students, have in the protections set out in prior guidance documents.

9 5. The 2017 Title IX policy imposes significant changes on educational institutions and on 10 students. For example, whereas before, educational institutions were permitted to offer interim 11 measures, such as a revised class schedule or new housing assignment, to a student who had 12 complained of sexual harassment, now they are prohibited from issuing interim measures in a
13 manner that minimizes the burden those students. The 2017 Title IX policy also relaxes
14 protections for sexual harassment victims, such as by permitting mediation between the parties, 15 even in cases of alleged sexual assault.

17 6. Underlying these changes and reversals are unfounded generalizations about women and 18 girls, particularly their credibility regarding reported experiences of sexual harassment, including 19 sexual violence. Myriad statements and actions by the Department's leadership reveal this 20 discriminatory viewpoint. Thus, not only does the Department's 2017 Title IX policy fail to meet
21 the reasoned decision and other requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act, it also

1 violates the Fifth Amendment’s equal protection guarantee. Plaintiffs therefore respectfully
2 request that the 2017 Title IX policy be vacated.

3 Jurisdiction and Venue

4 7. This Court has jurisdiction over this action pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1331.

5 8. Venue is proper under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e) because Equal Rights Advocates, a plaintiff,
6 resides in San Francisco, California.

8 Intradistrict Assignment

9 9. Filing is proper in this Judicial District because Equal Rights Advocates, a plaintiff, is 10 located in San Francisco, California.

11 Parties

12 10. Plaintiff SurvJustice, Inc., (“SurvJustice”) is a national not-for-profit organization based 13 in Washington, D.C., founded in 2014. SurvJustice’s mission is to increase the prospect of 14 justice for survivors of sexual violence. It pursues this goal through legal assistance, policy
15 advocacy, and institutional training. Through its efforts, SurvJustice aims to decrease the 16 prevalence of sexual violence throughout the country.
17

18 11. SurvJustice provides legal assistance to survivors of sexual violence in campus
19 proceedings, as well as civil and criminal legal systems. The majority of requests for legal 20 assistance that SurvJustice receives are from students at institutions of higher education.
21 SurvJustice staff help sexual violence survivors navigate the campus grievance process,
22 including reporting the violence, assisting survivors throughout any investigation, advising
23 survivors in campus hearings, helping survivors with any appeals, and helping survivors access
24 accommodations and services from their educational institutions. They frequently serve as 25 “advisors of choice” for college students in institutional disciplinary actions for cases of alleged 26 domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault or stalking, as provided for by the Clery Act as 27
28

1 amended by the 2013 Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act, 29 U.S.C. §
2 1092(f)(8)(B)(iv)(II) (“Clery Act”). SurvJustice staff also represent survivors in civil litigation or 3 refer survivors to other qualified lawyers for such representation. SurvJustice also assists
4 survivors in reporting crimes to law enforcement, in advocating for prosecution, and by serving
5 as media representatives for victims and their families in high-profile criminal cases.
6

7 12. SurvJustice also trains educational institutions to prevent and address sexual violence
8 through compliance with federal law, enforcement of victims’ rights, and adoption of best 9 practices that include development of a culture that supports survivors and encourages “sexual 10 respect” (i.e., respect in sexual interactions and relationships). As part of this work, SurvJustice
11 has provided the annual training required by the Clery Act, to various campus officials across the 12 country who investigate and adjudicate complaints of sexual assault, dating violence, domestic 13 violence, and stalking.
14

15 13. SurvJustice also engages in policy advocacy by providing technical assistance and advice
16 to legislators and policymakers on various state and federal legislation and policy efforts 17 regarding sexual violence, and working with changemakers within their communities on local 18 policy efforts, especially on college and university campuses.
19

20 14. SurvJustice brings this action on its own behalf because the challenged 2017 Title IX 21 policy (i) requires resource-intensive efforts that impede its daily operations; (ii) limits the 22 efficacy of available avenues of redress; (iii) increases the costs it bears in its work on behalf of 23 sexual violence survivors—for example by causing it to waive intake fees and reduce or waive
24 speaking fees; and (iv) otherwise directly conflicts with, impairs, and frustrates SurvJustice’s 25 organizational mission and priorities.
26
27
28

1 15. As an organization that provides direct assistance and referral services to survivors of 2 sexual violence, SurvJustice's core mission and daily operations have been and will continue to 3 be impeded by the chilling effect that the 2017 Title IX policy has had and continues to have on 4 the reporting of sexual violence.

5 16. Following and as a result of the 2017 Title IX policy change, SurvJustice experienced a
6 decrease in the number of sexual violence survivors seeking its services. This trend is borne out
7 by SurvJustice's interactions with particular college and university students who have questioned
8 whether they should continue with their plans to report sexual violence given the uncertainty
9 regarding their legal protections and an anticipated lowered likelihood of success created by the 10 policy change.

11 17. Following the 2017 Title IX policy change and as a result of the change, SurvJustice has 12 provided an increased number of student rights trainings at college and university campuses.
13 These additional trainings are necessary to respond to confusion created by the 2017 Title IX
14 policy among students about their legal rights. SurvJustice has also significantly reduced its price
15 for doing these trainings or agreed to provide them pro bono in response to increased need
16 resulting from the widespread uncertainty among students regarding their legal protections
17 following the 2017 Title IX policy change.

18 18. SurvJustice has also had to devote significant staff time to reviewing and understanding
19 the 2017 Title IX policy in order to advise clients in ongoing campus investigations and advocate
20 on their behalf. This shift in use of time has decreased the amount of time that SurvJustice has 21 available to provide legal services, including work on ongoing civil litigation.

22 19. The 2017 Title IX policy makes it more difficult for SurvJustice to accomplish its 23 mission of obtaining justice for survivors of sexual violence, both because it makes beneficial
24

1 outcomes less likely for survivors and because even where those outcomes are still available,
2 success will take more staff time and effort.

3 20. For example, SurvJustice often advocates for schools to provide accommodations to its 4 clients, including during the pendency of an investigation, so that they can continue to learn
5 safely. SurvJustice often requests unilateral no-contact orders on its clients' behalf but has
6 opposed mutual no-contact orders because they tend to be retaliatory.² Yet the agency's Title IX
7 policy change requires no-contact orders to be mutual, by prohibiting a school from making
8 interim measures available to only one party. The 2017 Title IX policy therefore impedes
9 SurvJustice's mission by making it more difficult for SurvJustice to obtain interim measures that 10 are appropriate for survivors of sexual harassment, and ensure ongoing access to education for its 11 clients in accordance with its mission.
12

13 21. In addition, since the 2017 Title IX policy no longer identifies any benchmarks to 14 determine whether colleges and universities are meeting their obligation to resolve reports of 15 sexual violence in a timely fashion, SurvJustice has observed a trend in educational institutions
16 not responding at all, or not responding as promptly, to its clients' complaints. This trend has 17 required SurvJustice to spend additional staff time and resources that it has not had to spend in 18 the past attempting to get school officials to respond to a survivor's complaint of sexual violence.
19

20 22. The agency's 2017 Title IX policy also makes it more difficult for SurvJustice to obtain
21 beneficial results for its clients due to, among other particulars, its endorsement of one-sided
22

24 _____
25 ² SurvJustice argues that mutual no-contact orders are forms of retaliation when there is no basis
26 to place the order against victim-complainants other than the fact that they made a Title IX
27 complaint. In such instances, schools limit victims' access to educational opportunities and 28 benefits as a direct result of the victims' assertion of their federal rights and utilization of the Title IX grievance process.

1 appeal rights and a heightened standard of evidence that disfavors survivors and makes findings
2 of responsibility for sexual misconduct more onerous.

3 23. Plaintiff Equal Rights Advocates (“ERA”) is a national non-profit civil rights
4 organization based in San Francisco, California. Founded in 1974, ERA is dedicated to 5 protecting and expanding economic educational access and opportunities for women and girls.

6
7 24. ERA furthers its mission through engaging in public education efforts as well as policy
8 reform and legislative advocacy; providing free legal information and counseling; and litigating
9 cases involving issues of gender discrimination in employment and education at all stages, from 10 the administrative agency process through and including the United States Supreme Court. ERA 11 has a long history of pursuing gender justice and equal opportunity for women and girls in 12 education and has litigated a number of important precedent-setting cases under Title IX, 13 including Doe v. Petaluma City School District, 54 F.3d 1447 (9th Cir. 1995), which held for the 14 first time that a school can be sued for sex discrimination under that law when it fails to address
15 one student’s serious harassment of another. ERA has participated as amicus curiae in scores of 16 state and federal cases involving the interpretation and application of procedural rules and civil 17 rights laws that have an impact on access to justice and economic opportunity for women and 18 girls. Through its Advice and Counseling program, ERA also provides free information and 19 assists individuals on matters relating to sex and gender discrimination at work and in school. As 20 part of its mission, ERA counsels and represents women who have been victims of sexual 21 harassment and/or sexual assault in matters pursuant to Title IX.
22

24 25. ERA brings this action on its own behalf because the challenged 2017 Title IX policy (i)
25 requires resource-intensive efforts that divert resources from its daily operations; (ii) limits the 26 efficacy of available avenues of redress to ERA’s clients and others it serves, (iii) increases the 27
28

1 costs ERA bears in its work on behalf of student survivors of sexual violence; and (iv) otherwise
2 directly conflicts with, impairs, and frustrates ERA’s organizational mission and programmatic 3 priorities.

4 26. ERA has had to expend resources over and above what it would otherwise have expended
5 in order to counteract the effects of the 2017 Title IX policy change. For example, to counteract
6 the effects of the Title IX policy change, ERA has had to divert staff time and resources away
7 from core programmatic activities, such as litigating employment-related civil rights
8 enforcement cases and cases involving Title IX enforcement that do not relate to sexual violence
9 in schools, in order to step up its efforts to assist victims of sexual harassment and assault in 10 educational settings obtain redress. In particular, ERA has launched a national initiative to End
11 Sexual Violence in Education (“ESVE”) to narrow a justice gap for survivors of sexual violence
12 that is expanding rapidly given the unlawful actions Defendants have taken. Through the ESVE
13 Initiative, which was launched as a result of the Department’s 2017 Title IX policy change, ERA
14 is expanding its Advice & Counseling program, re-designing its intake process, and developing 15 new resources to better reach and serve individuals facing sexual harassment and violence in 16 schools. Additionally, as part of ESVE and in order to counteract the negative impact of policy
17 changes and rollbacks at the federal level on ERA’s clients and the communities it serves, ERA
18 is expending resources and diverting resources away from core programmatic activities to 19 establish a network of attorneys to provide pro bono counseling and other assistance to victims
20 of sexual harassment and assault in schools. It also is planning to build a new website where 21 advocates for survivors can find and share resources with each other.

22 27. Moreover, as an organization that has a longstanding history of providing direct 23 assistance and referral services to survivors of sexual violence, ERA is hampered in its ability to 24

1 assist the victims of sexual harassment and assault that it represents and counsels in obtaining
2 equitable outcomes and redress for the harms they have suffered. In particular, and as discussed
3 more fully below, the 2017 Title IX policy change permits schools to offer asymmetric appellate
4 rights that disadvantage victims of sexual harassment, including sexual assault; permits schools
5 to evade responsibility for protecting students and the school community as a whole by resolving 6 claims of sexual assault privately through mediation; and rolls back other critical protections for 7 survivors that inhibit ERA's ability to obtain redress and achieve results for its clients.
8

9 28. Plaintiff Victim Rights Law Center ("VRLC") is a non-profit organization with 10 locations in Oregon and Massachusetts dedicated solely to serving the legal needs of rape and 11 sexual assault victims. The VRLC's mission is to provide legal representation to victims of rape 12 and sexual assault to help rebuild their lives; and to promote a national movement committed to 13 seeking justice for every rape and sexual assault victim.
14

15 29. VRLC provides legal services to help restore victims' lives after experiencing sexual 16 violence, ensuring that survivors may stay in school; protecting their privileged and confidential
17 mental health, medical and education records; preserving their employment; maintaining safe
18 housing; securing their immigration status; and swiftly accessing victim compensation and other
19 benefits. As part of its work, VRLC provides legal services and/or facilitates the provision of 20 legal services to individuals who have experienced sexual violence and/or assault on campuses.
21 With almost 50% of VRLC's clients under the age of 24, a substantial portion of its practice is 22 providing education related legal consultation and representation. VRLC attorneys represent 23 campus victims to communicate effectively with campus administrators, acquire interim
24 measures and accommodations to secure their education, prepare and attend disciplinary 25
26
27
28

1 hearings, file appeals and if necessary, to file complaints with the Department of Education,
2 Office of Civil Rights (“OCR”).

3 30. VRLC brings this action on its own behalf, because, as detailed below, the challenged
4 Title IX policy concretely frustrates its mission and purpose through (among other things) (i)
5 requiring resource-intensive efforts that impede its daily operations, (ii) impairing its mission of 6 providing legal assistance to survivors of sexual assault and/or violence, (iii) limiting the efficacy
7 of available avenues of redress for the population it seeks to serve, (iv) requiring that resources
8 be diverted in order to combat the harmful effects of the Title IX policy and (v) otherwise
9 directly conflicts with, impairs, and frustrates VRLC’s organizational mission and priorities.

11 31. The new 2017 Title IX policy has been devastating to VRLC’s mission and its 12 operational activities. For example, as result of the 2017 Title IX policy, sexual violence and 13 assault victims have expressed an unwillingness to report harassment and assault to campus
14 authorities, denying VRLC the ability to achieve its mission. VRLC saw an immediate chilling
15 effect after the Department issued its 2017 Dear Colleague letter and new Title IX policy. VRLC
16 has seen a decline in the number of sexual violence and assault survivors willing to pursue
17 justice through campus processes. The 2017 Title IX policy makes it less likely for VRLC
18 clients to engage in the campus process due to, among other particulars, its endorsement of one-
19 sided appeal rights and a heightened standard of evidence that disfavors survivors and makes 20 findings of responsibility for sexual assault and violence more onerous. Moreover, as a result of 21 the new Title IX policy there has been a decline in the number of survivors willing to file
22 complaints with the Department of Education and/or otherwise communicating with the 23 Department of Education where there is already an investigation pending. Such declines in 24 reporting and hesitance to participate in the grievance process either through educational 25
26
27
28

1 institutions or at the Department of Education directly threaten and frustrate VRLC's mission
2 and purpose.

3 32. In addition to chilling and discouraging sexual violence and assault victims from availing
4 themselves of campus processes, the new Title IX policy has made it difficult for VRLC to 5 provide appropriate legal advice that helps its clients weigh their options with the best
6 information, leading to further reductions in reports of sexual violence and assault.
7

8 33. In cases where a survivor or victim may proceed with a claim (which is rare under the 9 new Title IX policy), VRLC's mission remains frustrated given the nature of the Title IX policy.
10 In particular, the 2017 Title IX policy makes it more difficult for VRLC to accomplish its 11 mission of obtaining justice for survivors of sexual violence, both because it makes beneficial
12 outcomes less likely for survivors and because even where those outcomes are still available,
13 success will take more staff time and effort. In addition, since the 2017 Title IX policy no longer
14 requires colleges and universities to resolve reports of sexual violence in a timely fashion, VRLC
15 has observed a trend in educational institutions not responding or not responding as promptly to 16 its clients' complaints. This trend has required VRLC to spend additional staff time and 17 resources that it has not had to spend in the past attempting to get school officials to respond.
18

19 34. VRLC has also had to devote staff time to reviewing and understanding the 2017 Title IX
20 policy in order to advise clients in ongoing campus investigations and advocate on their behalf.
21 This use of time has decreased the amount of time that it has available to provide legal services,
22 including work on ongoing civil litigation.
23

24 35. Defendant U.S. Department of Education ("the Department" or "the agency") is a 25 federal agency headquartered in Washington, D.C. As discussed more fully below, the 26 Department implements Title IX through issuing regulations and guidance documents and is also 27
28

1 tasked with administrative enforcement of Title IX, 20 U.S.C. § 1682. As a federal agency, the 2 Department is subject to the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act and the United 3 States Constitution.

4 36. Defendant Elisabeth D. DeVos is the United States Secretary of Education. She is sued
5 in her official capacity.

6
7 37. Defendant Candice Jackson is the Acting Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights and 8 Deputy Assistant Secretary for Strategic Operations and Outreach for the Department. She is 9 sued in her official capacity.

10 Background

11 38. Sexual harassment, which is conduct, including but not limited to unwelcome sexual 12 advances, requests for sexual favors, and other unwelcome verbal, nonverbal, or physical 13 conduct of a sexual nature that targets someone because of their sex, including sexual assault or 14 other sexual violence (hereinafter “sexual harassment” or “sexual harassment, including sexual 15 violence”), is widespread in schools across the country, particularly in institutions of higher 16 education.
17

18 39. Sexual harassment disproportionately impacts women and girls. One in five women and 19 one in fourteen men experience sexual assault while in college.³ As the last Administration’s 20 Task Force to Protect Students from Sexual Assault concluded: “For female bisexual and 21

22 _____
23 ³ The White House, The Second Report of the White House Task Force to Protect Students from 24 Sexual Assault, 9 (Jan. 5, 2017), <https://obamawhitehouse.archives.gov/sites/obamawhitehouse.archives.gov/files/images/Documents/1.4.17.VAW%20Event.TF%20Report.PDF>. Similarly, a
25 2007 report by the National Criminal Justice Service found that one in five women were victims
26 of sexual assault while in college and that approximately 6.1 percent of men were victims of 27 completed or attempted sexual assault during college. In high schools, during the 2007-2008
28 school year, there were 800 reported incidents of rape or attempted rape and 2,800 reported incidents of other sexual batteries.

1 transgender students, victimization rates are even higher: More than 1 in 4 transgender students
2 and more than 1 in 3 of bisexual students experience sexual assault while in college.”⁴

3 40. While sexual harassment on college campuses is more widely known, students of all ages
4 face sexual harassment, including sexual assault. A nationally representative survey of students
5 in grades 7-12 in 2011 concluded that nearly half of the students surveyed experienced some 6 form of sexual harassment that school year, and the majority said that the experience had a
7 negative effect on them.⁵ Of these students, “[g]irls were more likely than boys to be sexually
8 harassed, by a significant margin.”⁶ Children who experience sexual violence are nearly 14 times
9 more likely to experience rape or attempted rape in their first year of college, according to the 10 National Center for Victims of Crime.⁷

11
12 41. Experiences of sexual violence harm students physically, psychologically, and 13 academically. Research shows that the effects of sexual assault in high school has consequences
14 that are “delayed and long lasting.”⁸ Sexually victimized students are more likely to drop classes,

1 change residences, and have lower GPAs, creating long-term consequences for professional
2 success and earning potential.⁹

3 42. Incidents of sexual harassment, including sexual violence, are often underreported,
4 especially on college campuses. For example, the Campus Climate Survey Validation Study 5 found that only 7 percent of students who indicated that they had been raped reported the rape to 6 school authorities.¹⁰

7
8 43. If unreported or inappropriately addressed, sexual harassment can continue unchecked
9 and create ongoing hostile environments for those who are the targets of such attacks.

10 Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972

11 44. Signed into law by President Nixon, Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, 20
12 U.S.C. § 1681, prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in any federally-funded education
13 program or activity. When a recipient institution fails to comply with Title IX or to take action to 14 remedy its non-compliance, it can be subject to a range of enforcement actions, including the 15 loss of federal financial assistance. 20 U.S.C. § 1682.

16
17 45. The Supreme Court has squarely held that sexual harassment, which includes sexual 18 violence, is a form of sex discrimination that Title IX requires schools to address and 19 remediate.¹¹

The Department of Education’s Implementation and Enforcement of Title IX

1
2 46. The U.S. Department of Education is the lead agency charged with enforcing Title IX. It
3 may do so by establishing rules, regulations, and procedures that implement Title IX and define
4 the ways in which educational institutions comply with Title IX’s requirements. See 20 U.S.C.
5 § 1682.

7 47. In 1975, the Department’s predecessor promulgated regulations to effectuate Title IX.
8 See 40 Fed. Reg. 24,128 (June 4, 1975). As amended, those regulations remain in effect today.
9 See 34 C.F.R. pt. 106. Among other things, the regulations incorporate Title IX’s 10 nondiscrimination mandate, see id. § 106.31(a), identify specific actions that constitute 11 discrimination, see id. § 106.31(b), and require assurances from recipients of federal financial 12 assistance that their programs and activities comply with regulatory requirements, see id.
13 § 106.4(a).

14
15 48. Recipients found to have discriminated on the basis of sex must “take such remedial
16 action as the Assistant Secretary [for Civil Rights] deems necessary to overcome the effects of 17 such discrimination.” Id. § 106.3(a).

18 49. The regulations require that recipients “adopt and publish grievance procedures providing 19 for prompt and equitable resolution” of student and employee complaints of sexual 20 discrimination, including sexual assault and other forms of sexual harassment. Id. § 106.8(b).
21 Such grievance procedures are designed to facilitate the reporting and resolution of complaints of 22 such sex discrimination so as to prevent and remedy hostile environments on campus.

23
24 50. These same regulations require that educational institutions “designate at least one
25 employee”—commonly known as a Title IX coordinator—“to coordinate its efforts to comply 26 with and carry out its responsibilities” under Title IX, including any investigation of any 27
28

1 complaint of sexual discrimination, including sexual violence and other forms of sexual
2 harassment. Id. § 106.8(a).

3 51. In addition to promulgating Title IX’s implementing regulations, the Department has 4 issued a series of guidance documents that explain the obligations recipient schools and 5 universities are required to take under Title IX.
6

7 The 1997 Sexual Harassment Guidance

8 52. The first of such guidance documents addressing educational institutions’ obligations to 9 address sexual harassment, titled Sexual Harassment Guidance: Harassment of Students by 10 School Employees, Other Students, or Third Parties, was published in 1997 after a public notice
11 and comment period and “extensive consultation with interested parties, [including] students,
12 teachers, school administrators, and researchers.” See 61 Fed. Reg. 42,728 (Aug. 16, 1996), 61
13 Fed. Reg. 52,172 (Oct. 4, 1996), and 62 Fed. Reg. 12,034, 120,35 (Mar. 13, 1997) (“1997
14 Guidance”). The 1997 Guidance provided information regarding the standards used by the 15 Department’s Office for Civil Rights (“OCR”) to investigate student complaints regarding 16 educational institutions’ responses to sexual harassment perpetrated by school employees, other 17 students (peers), or third parties.
18

19 53. The 1997 Guidance set forth principles for how educational institutions should address
20 sexual harassment in the educational setting. It noted that schools “are required by the Title IX
21 regulations to adopt and publish grievance procedures providing for prompt and equitable 22 resolution of sex discrimination complaints, including complaints of sexual harassment, and to 23 disseminate a policy against sex discrimination.” Id. at 12,040.
24

25 54. With respect to “informal mechanisms” for resolving complaints, the 1997 Guidance 26 explained that they may be used by mutual consent of the parties but that it was inappropriate for 27 a complaining student to be required to work out the problem directly with the individual 28

1 accused of harassment and that mediation would be inappropriate even on a voluntary basis in
2 cases that involve sexual assault. Id. at 12,045.

3 55. The 1997 Guidance further explained that, during an investigation of a complaint, a
4 school may take appropriate interim and remedial measures, such as placing the involved
5 students in separate classes or in different housing arrangements. The touchstone for these 6 measures was that they “be designed to minimize, as much as possible, the burden on the student
7 who was harassed.” Id. at 120,43.

8 56. The 1997 Guidance also made clear that, beyond temporary interim accommodations, a 9 school “may be required to provide . . . services to the student who was harassed if necessary to 10 address the effects of the harassment on that student.” Such service might include tutoring and 11 mental health counseling. Id.

12 57. The 1997 Guidance set forth factors that OCR would consider in evaluating whether a 13 school’s grievance procedures were “prompt and equitable,” noting that “many schools . . .
14 provide an opportunity to appeal the findings or remedy or both.” Id. at 12,044.

15 58. The 1997 Guidance explained that other legal or adjudicatory processes could not 16 substitute for a school’s own processes. For example, where possible criminal conduct was 17 involved, a police investigation “may be useful in terms of fact-gathering,” but, “because legal 18 standards for criminal conduct are different, police investigations or reports may not be 19 determinative of whether harassment occurred under Title IX and do not relieve the school of its 20 duty to respond promptly.” Id. at 12,045.

21
22
23
24 The 2001 Revised Sexual Harassment Guidance

25 59. Following the Supreme Court’s 1998 decision in Gebser v. Lago Vista Indep. Sch. Dist.,
26 524 U.S. 274 (1998) and its 1999 decision in Davis v. Monroe Cty. Bd. of Educ., 526 U.S. 629
27 (1999), the Department issued revisions to the 1997 Guidance in 2001, entitled Revised Sexual 28

1 Harassment Guidance: Harassment of Students by School Employees, Other Students, or Third
2 Parties. See 66 Fed. Reg. 5512 (Jan. 19, 2001).

3 60. The 2001 Guidance, which also followed a public notice and comment period, see 62
4 Fed. Reg. 66,092 (Nov. 2, 2000), reaffirms many of the principles set forth in the 1997
5 Guidance. It “explains how the requirements of the Title IX regulations apply to situations 6 involving sexual harassment of a student and outlines measures that schools should take to 7 ensure compliance [with Title IX and its implementing regulations].” 2001 Guidance at 4.

8 61. The 2001 Guidance reaffirms the requirement that educational institutions publish 9 grievance procedures “providing for prompt and equitable resolution of sex discrimination
10 complaints, including complaints of sexual harassment, and to disseminate a policy against sex
11 discrimination.” Id. at 14.

12 62. The 2001 Guidance further provides that “[o]nce a school has notice of possible sexual 13 harassment of students—whether carried out by employees, other students, or third parties—it
14 should take immediate and appropriate steps to investigate or otherwise determine what occurred
15 and take prompt and effective steps reasonably calculated to end any harassment, eliminate a 16 hostile environment if one has been created, and prevent harassment from occurring again.” Id.
17 at 15.

18 63. The 2001 Guidance specifies a number of factors that would be considered in 19 determining whether an educational institution’s grievance procedures were “prompt and 20 equitable,” as required by Title IX and the Department’s implementing regulations, including, as 21 in the 1997 Guidance, the acknowledgment that many schools “provid[ed] an opportunity to 22 appeal the findings or remedy or both.” Id. at 20.
23
24
25
26
27
28

1 64. The 2001 Guidance also reaffirms that although informal resolution of complaints might 2 be appropriate in some cases, OCR had “frequently advised schools” that “mediation” or other
3 informal resolution would not be appropriate in the context of some forms of sexual harassment,
4 such as sexual assault, even on a voluntary basis. Id. at 21.

5 65. The 2001 Guidance also reiterates the importance of interim measures discussed in the 6 1997 Guidance, stressing that such measures “should be designed to minimize, as much as 7 possible, the burden on the student who was harassed.” Id. at 16.

8 66. Like the 1997 Guidance, the 2001 Guidance made clear that, after an investigation has 9 concluded, a school “may be required to provide. . . services to the student who was harassed if 10 necessary to address the effects of the harassment on that student.” Id. at 16-17.

11 67. The 2001 Guidance cautions schools, as did the 1997 Guidance, about relying on police
12 or insurance company investigations as a substitute for their own processes, again emphasizing
13 the different purposes and legal standards applicable in those third-party investigations. Id. at 21.

14 68. Finally, the 2001 Guidance notes that both employees and students of public schools and 15 universities are entitled to certain Constitutional due process protections, and that the rights
16 established under Title IX must be interpreted consistent with any federally guaranteed due
17 process rights involved in a complaint proceeding. The guidance instructed, however, that 18 recipients should ensure that “steps to accord due process rights do not restrict or unnecessarily
19 delay the protections provided by Title IX to the complainant.” Id. at 22.

20
21
22
23 The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and 2014 Q&A Document

24 69. Even with the Department’s enforcement and guidance activities, sexual harassment, 25 including sexual violence, has remained a pervasive problems on campuses and in schools across 26 the country.

1 70. In the wake of these ongoing challenges, educational institutions solicited assistance from 2 the Department of Education in further understanding their obligations under Title IX in regard
3 to sexual harassment, particularly sexual violence. Thereafter, in 2011, the Department issued a
4 “Dear Colleague Letter on Sexual Violence” and, in 2014, a set of Questions and Answers to 5 respond to additional concerns raised by schools and students.¹²
6

7 71. Citing the “deeply troubling” statistics concerning sexual violence on campuses, the 2011
8 Dear Colleague Letter provided clarity on how schools should address peer-on-peer sexual 9 harassment, including sexual violence, as well as steps that schools could take to respond in 10 accordance with the Department’s regulations and 2001 Guidance.

11 72. The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter reiterated, consistent with the 2001 Guidance, the 12 importance of schools offering services to survivors, such as tutoring and mental health care, to 13 ensure that they can continue to learn in the wake of sexual harassment, including sexual 14 violence. 2011 Dear Colleague Letter at 15-17. It noted, again consistent with the 2001
15 Guidance, that necessary accommodations may include interim remedies to protect the 16 complainant during the investigation. Id. at 15.
17

18 73. As in the 2001 Guidance, the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter discussed what constitutes a
19 prompt and equitable adjudication. The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter also made clear that Title IX
20 requires schools to provide complainants and respondents equal rights and opportunities
21 throughout an investigation and any appellate process. Id. at 12.

28 2014), <https://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/docs/qa-201404-title-ix.pdf> (“2014 Q&A”).

1 74. The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter also discouraged schools from allowing a complainant
2 and alleged perpetrator to directly cross-examine each other. As the guidance explained, 3 “[a]llowing an alleged perpetrator to question an alleged victim directly may be traumatic or 4 intimidating, thereby possibly escalating or perpetuating a hostile environment.” Id. at 12.

5 75. The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter reiterated the ongoing policy expressed in the 2001
6 Guidance that mediation is an inappropriate way to resolve complaints of sexual violence. Id. at 7
8 8.

9 76. The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter also discussed, in response to questions that school
10 administrators had posed, the burden of proof that recipient schools should use in investigating
11 complaints of sexual assault. The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter explained that, in investigating
12 Title IX complaints, OCR reviews a school’s grievance procedures to determine whether a 13 school uses preponderance of the evidence as the complainant’s burden of proof. It explained
14 that this burden appropriately reflected the burden used in litigation under Title VII of the Civil 15 Rights Act of 1964, to which courts have looked in construing Title IX, as well as the burden
16 used by OCR in investigating Title IX complaints against recipients of federal funding. Id. at 11.

17 77. Also consistent with the 2001 Guidance, the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter reiterated that 18 public and state-supported schools must provide due process protections to an alleged 19 perpetrator. Id. at 12.

20 78. In 2014, the Department issued further clarifications consistent with its previously issued
21 guidance in response to questions that it received from schools and colleges in the form of a
22 Questions and Answers document (“2014 Q&A”). The 2014 Q&A provided examples of 23 proactive efforts schools could take to prevent sexual violence and remedies schools could use to 24 end such conduct, prevent its recurrence, and address its effects.
25
26
27
28

1 79. Among other things, the 2014 Q&A further discussed Title IX’s mandate that schools
2 take steps to ensure equal access to educational programs and activities, including by protecting
3 a complainant with interim measures pending resolution of a complaint. Such measures should 4 allow the complainant to avoid contact with the alleged perpetrator and “to change academic and 5 extracurricular activities or his or her living, transportation, dining, and working situations as 6 appropriate.” 2014 Q&A at 32. This requirement is consistent with the 2001 Guidance’s
7 emphasis on Title IX’s mandate to take immediate steps once a complaint is filed to eliminate 8 any hostile environment and prevent harassment from occurring again. Id. at 32-33; see also 9 2001 Guidance at 12.

11 80. The 2014 Q&A also emphasized that schools should provide the same rights and 12 opportunities to complainants and respondents. 2014 Q&A at 26.

14 81. The 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and the 2014 Q&A were not the subject of a public 15 notice and comment process because they did not reflect any policy change but rather reminded 16 schools of longstanding statutory and regulatory obligations to address sexual harassment,
17 including sexual violence, while providing more details and examples of how to do so. Both 18 documents were the product of the Department’s consideration of the standards that OCR had 19 relied on in dozens of investigations and reflected the input of students, faculty, administrators,
20 staff, attorneys, Sexual Assault Response Teams (“SARTs”), counselors, student advocates, 21 medical personnel, parents, law enforcement, prosecutors, and campus police.

23 The Trump Administration’s Change in Title IX Policy

24 82. Following his inauguration, President Trump appointed Secretary DeVos to lead the 25 Department of Education. In April 2017, Secretary DeVos selected Candice Jackson to serve as 26 Deputy Assistant Secretary and to lead OCR as Acting Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights.

1 83. Secretary DeVos and Ms. Jackson have repeatedly criticized the protections that Title IX
2 affords to women and other survivors of sexual harassment, including sexual violence. Much of 3 that criticism has been based on discriminatory stereotypes and unfounded generalizations about 4 female college students in general and female victims of sexual violence in particular.

5 84. For example, Ms. Jackson has repeatedly criticized core civil rights achievements, such 6 as legal protections against sexual harassment. For example, in a book she published in 2005,
7 Ms. Jackson stated that laws to combat sexual harassment gloss over “the reality that unwanted
8 sexual advances are difficult to define.”¹³

9 85. Ms. Jackson regularly questions the veracity of sexual harassment and assault claims
10 made by women, stating, for example:
11

12 [I]t wasn’t enough that women are not legally forbidden anymore from getting an 13 education and entering the workforce. Feminists and other leftists thought the 14 problem of workplace sexual harassment needed a legal remedy. Since sexual 15 harassment is such a nebulous experience, defined so subjectively and turning on 16 the perceptions of the people involved, laws banning it are difficult to articulate.
17 But they have tried anyway, with the side result that many men self-censor 18 themselves to avoid being accused of sexual harassment, and institutions remove 19 valid expressions of art and learning to avoid “even the appearance of sexual 20 harassment.”¹⁴

21 86. In October 2016, a few months before joining the Department, Ms. Jackson stated in a 22 social media post that women who claimed that Donald Trump sexually harassed them were 23 “fake victims.”¹⁵ Ms. Jackson’s post came just days after a tape surfaced of President Trump 24 expressly bragging about sexually assaulting women.

28 Discrimination for Being White* (Apr. 14, 2017), <https://www.propublica.org/article/devos-candice-jackson-civil-rights-office-education-department>.

1 87. Similarly, and for example, in the past, Secretary DeVos has provided substantial
2 financial contributions—a form of speech—to FIRE, an organization that advocates for schools
3 to abdicate their responsibility to address sexual violence and instead defer entirely to law
4 enforcement.¹⁶ It asserts that the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter “eviscerated due process rights of 5 students and faculty accused of sexual misconduct on campus.”¹⁷ FIRE has previously litigated
6 against the Department to weaken Title IX’s protections, including by arguing that the 7 preponderance of the evidence standard, which is used in nearly all civil matters, is unfair to the 8 alleged perpetrator in a Title IX grievance proceeding.

9
10 88. Since they have assumed their current roles at the Department, Secretary DeVos’s and 11 Ms. Jackson’s official actions and statements preceding the 2017 Title IX policy reveal their 12 discriminatory motivation.

13
14 89. For example, Secretary DeVos actively solicited the views of those individuals and 15 groups that oppose robust Title IX protections and have questioned the veracity of survivors’
16 experiences. Shortly after assuming her role as Secretary, Secretary DeVos met with State
17 Representative Earl Ehrhart from Georgia—a notorious opponent of Title IX—to discuss, among

1 other topics, Title IX enforcement.¹⁸ Representative Ehrhart has pushed a state bill that would
2 require colleges to refer all sexual assault reports to the police, even against a victim's expressed
3 wishes, a dangerous policy which would discourage reporting by victims. He has also questioned
4 women's credibility on the experience of sexual assault accusing one woman of "utilizing a
5 victim's status" for ulterior motives.¹⁹ Similarly, during the summer of 2017, Secretary DeVos
6 met with the National Coalition for Men, an organization that has published photos of women
7 who have made complaints of rape, calling them "false victims."²⁰ This Coalition has referred to 8 rape survivors as "anti-male."²¹

9
10 90. In contrast, only after repeated, collective requests from organizations representing the 11 interests of sexual harassment and assault survivors did Secretary DeVos agree to meet with 12 them. Plaintiffs, along with other organizations that advocate for Title IX's protections for sexual 13 assault survivors, sent Secretary DeVos a letter in April 2017 urging her to consider the views of 14 sexual assault survivors and groups dedicated to their rights, as opposed to biased and extreme
15 views, such as those held by Mr. Ehrhart.²² While Department decisionmakers did eventually 16 meet with SurvJustice and others representing the views of sexual violence survivors, one

1 survivors' rights group, Know Your IX, was disinvited after its co-founders published an op-ed
2 critical of the Office for Civil Rights.

3 91. Although Title IX affords protections to all victims of discriminatory conduct on the 4 basis of sex, Secretary DeVos and Ms. Jackson's statements have criticized the protections that 5 civil rights laws, such as Title IX, afford to women, continuing to base their statements on 6 stereotypes about college women and women who are survivors of sexual harassment, including 7 sexual assault.

8
9 92. In a July 2017 article in the New York Times, in which Ms. Jackson was quoted, she 10 publicly propounded discriminatory stereotypes of women who survive sexual assault.
11 Regarding investigations conducted by schools and universities to identify and remedy unlawful 12 sexual violence and other forms of harassment, she stated:

13
14 [In most investigations there's] not even an accusation that these accused students 15 overrode the will of a young woman. Rather, the accusations—90 percent of 16 them—fall into the category of 'we were both drunk,' 'we broke up, and six months later I found myself under a Title IX investigation because she just decided that our last sleeping together was not quite right.'²³

17 93. In September 2017, Secretary DeVos gave a speech on campus sexual harassment, 18 including sexual violence, at George Mason University. In her remarks, she cited a number of 19 examples where students, particularly male students accused of sexual violence, were allegedly 20 treated unfairly by their schools. She used these examples to justify rescinding the 2011 Dear
21 Colleague Letter and 2014 Q&A.²⁴ Yet these anecdotes involve problems that arose because

28

1 schools did not follow the then-existing guidance, and therefore do not support rescission of that 2 guidance.

3 94. Secretary DeVos's September 2017 speech presented as equally problematic the harm
4 faced by sexual violence survivors and the harm faced by individuals who have been falsely
5 accused, despite a lack of evidence that the latter is a widespread problem extending beyond a
6 few occurrences, unlike the former.²⁵ Rather than recognizing that false accusations are rare,
7 Secretary DeVos presented the problem of false accusations as rampant. On the contrary,
8 research shows that the prevalence of false allegations of sexual assault is very low—false
9 accusations regarding criminal sexual assault, for example, are estimated at 2-10 percent.²⁶
10

11 95. Secretary DeVos also asserted that the loss of due process protections for alleged 12 perpetrators is a widespread problem on school campuses, mentioning “due process” ten times
13 during the speech. She also claimed that “the system established by the prior administration” was 14 responsible for creating “victims of a lack of due process”.²⁷
15

16 96. Secretary DeVos also expressed doubt about the seriousness of sexual harassment claims,
17 saying, “[I]f everything is harassment, then nothing is.”²⁸ This statement, among other things,
18 minimizes the full range of sexual harassment and its impact on women and girls, including 19 deprivation of their access to education.
20

21 97. Secretary DeVos's and Ms. Jackson's statements are consistent with and reveal their 22 discriminatory belief, based on gender stereotypes, that many girls and women who report sexual

1 harassment misunderstood a harmless romantic advance and that those who report sexual
2 violence often are either lying or have regret about a consensual sexual encounter.

3 98. This discriminatory mindset not only motivated decisionmakers at the Department, it
4 flows from the top of the Executive Branch. President Trump's actions and statements reveal his 5 discriminatory and stereotyped views of women, and particularly women's veracity regarding 6 claims of sexual harassment, including violence. For example, during his campaign for President,
7 Donald Trump called women who have made accusations of sexual harassment and assault
8 against him "phony accusers" who have made such reports to get "some free fame." He has 9 called sexual harassment reports against him by women "a total setup" and that the women who
10 made those reports, "horrible."²⁹

11
12 99. Mr. Trump has bragged about sexually assaulting women on audiotape, but continues to 13 deny the experiences of women and girls who have experienced sexual assault. He asserted that 14 "every woman lied when they came forward..." regarding alleged sexual harassment by him, and 15 that all of the women "liars will be sued after the election is over."³⁰

16
17 100. This discriminatory and stereotyped view of women and girls has become formal White
18 House policy, as the White House has asserted in an official statement that at least sixteen
19 women who had accused the President of sexual harassment were lying.³¹ The Trump
20 Administration's animus towards women gives license to and encourages Executive branch

3 2017 Title IX Policy

4 101. On September 22, 2017, the Department issued a new Dear Colleague Letter (“2017 Dear
5 Colleague Letter”), rescinding the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter and 2014 Q&A.³² The 2017 Dear
6 Colleague Letter also provides new information about how the Department will assess an
7 educational institution’s compliance with Title IX through a set of Questions and Answers.³³
8 Together these documents set forth the Department’s revised Title IX policy (“2017 Title IX 9 policy”).
10

11 102. The 2017 Title IX policy departs dramatically from the 2011 and 2014 guidance
12 documents. The 2017 Title IX policy does not simply rescind the 2011 Dear Colleague Letter
13 and 2014 Q&A. Instead, it affirmatively contradicts Department policies that the 2017 Title IX
14 policy supposedly kept in effect, including the 2001 Guidance.
15

16 103. The 2017 Title IX policy, among other changes from existing law, imposes the following 17 requirements on schools, and weakens the following protections:

18 • prohibits educational institutions from issuing interim measures that minimize the 19 burden on complainants to modify their work and class schedules or housing assignments,
20 thereby increasing the risk that survivors of sexual harassment are isolated from their support
21 networks in the aftermath of their experience, see 2017 Q&A at 3;

22 • requires educational institutions issuing interim measures to provide such 23 measures to both parties thereby placing the burden on the complainant of sexual harassment to 24

27 ³³ See 2017 Q&A.

1 modify their access to education, and in turn increasing the risk that survivors of sexual
2 harassment are isolated from their support networks in the aftermath of their experience and
3 impeded in their ongoing access to educational benefits and opportunities, see 2017 Q&A at 3;

4 • requires educational institutions to consider the impact on a perpetrator’s access
5 to education, even after finding the individual responsible for sexual harassment or violence, in 6 reaching the decision on sanctions, id. at 6;

7
8 • eliminates the requirement that educational institutions, in determining whether 9 there is a hostile environment, consider the effect of off-campus conduct that does not involve a 10 program or activity of the institution, id. at 1, n. 3.

11 • eliminates the requirement that educational institutions provide appellate rights to 12 both parties, if they are provided at all, and instead permitting institutions to provide appellate 13 rights only to the alleged perpetrator, id. at 6-7;

14
15 • permits educational institutions not to provide interim measures to protect victims 16 of sexual harassment, including sexual violence from further harassment or violence during the 17 investigation into their complaint, see at 2–3;

18 • does not require educational institutions to timely resolve reports of sexual 19 harassment, including sexual violence, id. at 3;

20
21 • permits educational institutions to resolve claims of sexual assault through 22 mediation if both parties consent, notwithstanding, among other concerns, the likelihood that 23 mediation may retraumatize the victim, see id. at 4;

24 • permits educational institutions to use the “clear and convincing evidence” burden 25 of proof in adjudicating claims of sexual harassment, including sexual violence, rather than the 26 equitable standard of “preponderance of evidence,” id. at 5;

- 1 • eliminates the caution against educational institutions relying on criminal
2 investigations as a substitute for their own independent investigations and determinations
3 regarding complaints of sexual harassment, including sexual violence, cf. 2014 Q&A at 27;
- 4 • eliminates the prohibition on permitting an alleged perpetrator to question a 5 complainant’s sexual history with individuals other than the alleged perpetrator, cf. id. at 31;
- 6 • eliminates the prohibition on educational institutions treating a current or previous
7 consensual dating or sexual relationship between parties as implying consent or precluding a 8 filing of sexual violence, cf. id. at 31;
- 9 • fails to provide instructions on how to respond when a complainant requests
10 confidentiality or requests that no investigation or disciplinary action be pursued, cf. id. at 18-22;
11 and
12 • eliminates the strong discouragement to educational institutions from permitting
13 alleged perpetrators to directly cross-examine complainants to avoid the perpetuation of a hostile 14 environment, cf. id.

17 104. The 2017 Title IX policy definitively changes expectations for recipient institutions,
18 including the expectations outlined in the longstanding 2001 Guidance, which (unlike the 2017 19 Title IX policy) was the product of notice and comment procedures and is still in effect. For 20 example, the 2001 Guidance stated that in “alleged sexual violence, mediation will not be 21 appropriate even on a voluntary basis,” 2001 Guidance at 21, while the 2017 Title IX policy
22 permits explicitly mediation in all cases where the parties consent. 2017 Q&A at 4.

24 105. The 2017 Title IX policy also sets forth expectations and mandates on educational 25 institutions that are inconsistent with the statutory text of Title IX and its implementing 26 regulations, including but not limited to the following: providing for one-sided appellate rights
27
28

1 favoring the accused; permitting schools to adopt a higher burden of proof—clear and 2 convincing evidence—for adjudicating complaints of sexual harassment, including sexual 3 violence; considering the impact that particular sanctions would have on a perpetrator’s access to 4 education after being found responsible for sexual harassment, including sexual violence, under
5 Title IX; and departing from prior policy requiring interim measures be issued to promptly
6 remedy the hostile environment for the complainant of sexual harassment.
7

8 106. Ironically, Defendants issued the 2017 Title IX policy and rescinded the 2011 and 2014
9 guidance documents without any opportunity for public notice and comment on the new policy
10 despite stating that the “era of rule by letter is over.”³⁴ The Department stated that it would “craft
11 a new Title IX regulation” after a period of notice and comment.³⁵ Yet, in the four months that 12 have passed, the Department has not done so.
13

14 107. In promulgating the 2017 Title IX policy, Defendants deviated from normal 15 administrative processes and failed to provide reasoned justifications for the abrupt reversal in 16 policy—and frequently failed to acknowledge the reversal in policy.

17 108. The 2017 Title IX policy also relies on errors of fact and law. Among these, the 2017
18 Dear Colleague letter makes several claims about the effects of the rescinded guidance, stating,
19 for example that it had “led to the deprivation of rights for many students—both the accused 20 students denied fair process and victims denied an adequate resolution of their complaints.” 2017
21 Dear Colleague Letter at 1-2. On the contrary, the prior policy did not require schools to limit
22 due process or basic fairness protections for alleged perpetrators. While there are anecdotes of 27 ³⁵ Id.

28

1 schools making errors in providing these procedural protections, such errors were neither
2 required by, nor the result of, the 2011 and 2014 guidance documents.

3 109. The 2011 and 2014 guidance documents clarified the requirements that Title IX imposes
4 on educational institutions to respond to complaints of sexual harassment and the protections it
5 requires for complainants. As such, they empowered students to make complaints of sexual 6 harassment, including sexual violence through campus complaint processes. The 2017 Title IX
7 policy does not acknowledge or otherwise account for the reliance interests that students, or 8 organizations that work with students, have in these protections. A student who filed a complaint
9 regarding sexual violence before the issuance of the 2017 Title IX policy would have been 10 assured that her educational institution should resolve the investigation within about sixty days, 11 and among other protections, she would not be cross-examined by the person who allegedly 12 assaulted her. For those students whose complaints were pending in the fall of 2017, no such 13 assurances remain.
14
15

16 110. Furthermore, the 2017 Title IX policy's retrenchment on Title IX protections for victims 17 of sexual harassment, including sexual violence, in educational institutions is motivated by 18 stereotypical assumptions and overbroad generalizations about girls and women. Specifically,
19 decisionmakers at the Department hold the discriminatory views, as evidenced by Secretary
20 DeVos's and Ms. Jackson's statements, that (1) many girls and women who report sexual 21 harassment, including sexual violence, have misunderstood a harmless romantic advance and (2)
22 most girls and women who report sexual violence either are lying or have regret about a 23 consensual sexual encounter.
24
25

27
28

The Devastating Effects of the Department’s 2017 Title IX Policy

111. The 2017 Title IX policy curtails important protections against sexual harassment. This rollback has had devastating effects on students’ equal access to educational opportunity, which is all too often thwarted on the basis of their sex.

112. Following the issuance of the 2017 Title IX policy, schools have stated their intention to modify their practices. For example, after the Department closed an investigation into the handling of campus sexual violence at the University of Houston, the university’s spokesman stated that, in light of the current guidance, the university may make some changes to how it adjudicates sexual misconduct violations to “better align with the [Department of Education’s] expectations to how we ensure due process.”³⁶

113. Following the issuance of the 2017 Title IX policy, numerous individuals who have been the subject of sexual violence or harassment have expressed a hesitance or unwillingness to report their incidents to their school authorities, citing the Department’s 2017 Title IX policy as the reason for their hesitation or unwillingness.

114. These devastating consequences have overwhelmingly and disproportionately harmed women and girls, among other populations that are disproportionately likely to be targeted for sexual harassment and violence.

115. As outlined more fully in paragraphs 10-34, the consequences of the Department’s 2017 Title IX policy have harmed and continue to harm Plaintiffs. Indeed, Plaintiffs are organizations

The South Dakota Board of Regents has also passed interim Title IX sexual assault guidelines following the 2017 Title IX policy. See Danielle Ferguson, South Dakota Board of Regents Passes Interim Title IX Sexual Assault Guidelines, Argus Leader, Dec. 7, 2017, <http://www.argusleader.com/story/news/2017/12/07/regents-pass-interim-title-ix-sexual-assault-guidelines/926445001/>.

1 that assist and counsel survivors of sexual harassment, including sexual violence. As a result of 2 the chilling effect that the Department's change in policy has had and continues to have on 3 reporting sexual assault and other forms of sexual harassment, Plaintiffs are unable to meet their 4 missions of serving survivors of sexual violence and other forms of sexual harassment. Further,
5 Plaintiffs have had to expend resources over and above normal levels to combat underreporting
6 that has resulted from the Department's change in policy, causing a diversion of resources away
7 from their other core programmatic activities.
8

9 116. The effects of the 2017 Title IX policy have also required Plaintiffs to expend resources
10 over and above their normal levels to combat confusion among survivors and educational 11 institutions and to educate both on the requirements of Title IX's antidiscrimination provisions.
12 These resource expenditures have taken away from Plaintiffs' other core programmatic activities, 13 causing a diversion of resources.
14

15 Claims for Relief

16 Count One

17 (Violation of the Administrative Procedure Act, 5 U.S.C. § 706)

18 117. Plaintiffs incorporate by reference the foregoing paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

19 118. The Administrative Procedure Act ("APA") empowers this Court to set aside agency
20 action that is arbitrary, capricious, or contrary to law. It also requires an agency to provide a
21 sufficient explanation for its actions and to set aside actions and empowers this Court to set aside
22 actions that were undertaken without observance of procedure required by law.

23 119. The 2017 Title IX policy is the Department's current policy for interpreting and 24 enforcing Title IX; it contains expectations and mandates for recipients that represents a shift
25 away from prior policy. Although labeled as interim, the 2017 Title IX policy is final agency
26 action for the purposes of the APA because it represents a conclusive shift in Department policy
27
28

1 that governs the enforcement and interpretation of Title IX and it has no definite termination
2 date.

3 120. By issuing the 2017 Title IX policy, the Defendants have adopted a policy that is 4 arbitrary, capricious, and contrary to law.

5 121. Among other particulars, the 2017 Title IX policy arbitrarily and without reasoned
6 explanation eliminates protections designed to prevent a discriminatory educational environment.
7 It does so, for example, by permitting the use of mediation to resolve claims of sexual assault,
8 which is not only arbitrary and unexplained, but also directly contradicts the Department's 2001
9 Guidance. It also fails to consider the reliance interests that students have in the continuation of 10 those protections.
11

12 122. In addition, the 2017 Title IX policy fails to articulate an adequate reason for, or in some 13 cases even acknowledge, its departure from prior guidance documents and other Department
14 interpretations of Title IX and its implementing regulations, including the 2014 Q&A, 2011 Dear
15 Colleague Letter, and 2001 Guidance.
16

17 123. Defendants' proffered explanation for issuing the 2017 Title IX policy is based upon 18 mistakes of fact and law.

19 124. Defendants also acted in an arbitrary and capricious manner by implementing their 2017
20 Title IX policy without following the procedures required by law.
21

22 125. As a result of Defendants' unlawful actions, Plaintiffs have been harmed and their 23 missions frustrated, as outlined more fully in paragraphs 10-34 above.

24 Count Two
25 (Ultra Vires Action)

26 126. Plaintiffs incorporate by reference the foregoing paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.
27
28

1 127. This Court has the power to set aside actions by the Executive Branch that are ultra vires
2 (i.e. without legal authority).

3 128. In adopting the 2017 Title IX policy and permitting recipients of federal funding to adopt
4 policies that disadvantage victims of sexual harassment, including sexual violence, and benefit
5 the alleged perpetrators, such as by permitting educational institutions to provide one-sided
6 appellate rights, and in considering factors unrelated to Title IX's mandate in doing so,
7 Defendants have acted in excess of their legal authority.
8

9 Count Three
10 (Violation of the Equal Protection Guarantee of the Fifth Amendment)

11 129. Plaintiffs incorporate by reference the foregoing paragraphs as if fully set forth herein.

12 130. The Due Process Clause of the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution 13 forbids the federal government from denying equal protection of the laws, including by 14 discriminating on the basis of sex.

15 131. In issuing the 2017 Title IX policy, Defendants were motivated, at least in part, by their 16 discriminatory—and baseless—gender stereotype that many women and girls lack credibility
17 with regard to sexual harassment. Such stereotype includes the perception that women and girls 18 who report sexual harassment misunderstood a harmless romantic advance and that those who 19 report sexual violence often are either lying or have regret about a consensual sexual encounter.
20

21 132. The statements and actions of Secretary DeVos and Ms. Jackson, as well as the 22 circumstances under which the 2017 Title IX policy change was issued, further demonstrate that 23 Defendants issued the 2017 Title IX policy knowing it would have a disparate impact on women, 24 who constitute the overwhelming majority of sexual harassment and assault survivors, by 25 reducing federal protections for victims of sexual harassment and assault. They took this action
26 not despite this impact on women, but because of it.
27
28

1 133. Defendants, in issuing the 2017 Title IX policy based on gender stereotyped assumptions,
2 as evidenced by contemporary statements, departing from normal agency processes, acting with
3 the knowledge that the policy would disproportionately impact female students, and motivated
4 by that disproportionate impact, discriminated on the basis of sex in violation of the Due Process
5 Clause of the Fifth Amendment.

6
7 134. As a result of Defendants' unlawful actions, Plaintiffs have been harmed and their
8 missions frustrated, as outlined more fully in paragraphs 10-34 above.

9 WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs pray that this Court:

- 10 1. Declare the Dear Colleague Letter and the Q&A issued in September 2017
- 11 unlawful;
- 12 2. Issue an injunction ordering Defendants to vacate the Dear Colleague
- 13 Letter and the Q&A issued in September 2017;
- 14 3. Award Plaintiffs costs, attorneys' fees, and other disbursements for this
- 15 action; and
- 16 4. Grant any other relief this Court deems appropriate.
