1 INTRODUCTION

2 Plaintiffs’ complaint sets forth detailed allegations describing the severe and 3 obvious trauma they suffered at the government’s hands when their children were torn 4 from them at the border and they were then detained without knowing where their 5 children were, if they were safe, or whether they would ever see them again. Plaintiffs 6 further allege that they have received no treatment for this trauma—and certainly none 7 that could be considered appropriate and effective—despite the government’s 8 obligation to provide such treatment while they were detained and after their release.

9 In moving to dismiss the Complaint, the government misconstrues the nature of 10 Plaintiffs’ claims and completely disregards the substantial allegations presented. It also 11 improperly asks this Court to resolve factual questions against Plaintiffs on a motion to 12 dismiss. Contrary to the government’s contentions, Plaintiffs have adequately alleged 13 live claims for injunctive relief for which the government has waived sovereign 14 immunity and have brought their claims in an appropriate venue. The government’s 15 motion to dismiss should be denied.

16 BACKGROUND

17 A. Plaintiffs and the Proposed Class.

18 Plaintiffs are three mothers who were separated from their minor children under 19 the government’s family separation policy, seeking to represent a class of parents who 20 “were, are, or will be detained in immigration custody by the Department of Homeland 21 Security” and “have a minor child who has been, is, or will be separated from them by 22 DHS and detained in DHS or [Office of Refugee Resettlement] custody or foster care,” 23 absent a showing that the parent is unfit or a danger to the child.<sup>1</sup>

24 B. The Government Implemented the Family Separation Policy.

25 On May 7, 2018, Defendant Attorney General Jeff Sessions announced a “zero-26 tolerance” policy of forcibly separating immigrant families, including asylum-seekers, 27

28 <sup>1</sup> Compl. ¶¶ 4, 165 & pp. 59–60 (Prayer for Relief) ¶ 1.

1 at the U.S.-Mexico border.<sup>2</sup> Nearly 3,000 children (including over 100 younger than 2 four and some as young as 18 months) were separated from their parents while crossing
3 the border in the first month alone.<sup>3</sup> The government mischaracterized family separation 4 as necessary to enforce the law, but DHS and administration officials confirmed that 5 the policy was implemented to deter migration from Central America.<sup>4</sup>

6 C. The Family Separation Policy Is Enjoined As Likely Unconstitutional.

7 The family separation policy was met with public outcry and legal challenges. In 8 the Ms. L. case, Judge Dana Sabraw preliminarily certified a class of parents separated 9 from their children and preliminarily enjoined defendants from detaining class members 10 in DHS custody apart from their minor children, absent a determination that the parent 11 is unfit or a danger to the child. The court ordered defendants to reunify class members 12 with their minor children within specific timeframes and preliminarily enjoined 13 defendants from removing class members without their child.<sup>5</sup>

14 Judge Sabraw found that the government’s practice of separating families, as 15 implemented, “is likely to be so egregious, so outrageous, that it may fairly be said to 16 shock the contemporary conscience . . . interferes with rights implicit in the concept of 17 ordered liberty, . . . and is so brutal and offensive that it [does] not comport with 18 traditional ideas of fair play and decency.” Id. at 17. Judge Sabraw also found that the 19 plaintiffs were likely to suffer irreparable harm because they were likely deprived of 20 their constitutional rights, that the balance of equities and public interest favored the 21 plaintiffs because they had established that the policy was likely unconstitutional and 2 immigration laws, and that the injunction would protect the children’s interest in the 3 care, custody, and control of their parents. Id. at 17, 20–21.

4 D. Family Separation Inflicts Trauma on Parents and Children.

5 The government’s family separation policy has inflicted extensive harm on 6 separated families. Trauma experts agree that tearing children from parents inflicts
 7 severe complex trauma on parents and children. Trauma is the body’s neurobiological 8 stress response to experiencing or witnessing an event involving life-threatening 9 circumstances or threat of serious injury that causes the individual to feel intense fear, 10 helplessness, or horror.<sup>6</sup> Complex trauma consists of multiple, repeated, persistent, or 11 prolonged exposure to trauma such that the body’s response impacts the development 12 and functioning of the brain.<sup>7</sup> Untreated trauma causes immediate and long-lasting 13 physical and psychological harm, especially in children, whose developing bodies and 14 brains are poorly equipped to cope with traumatic stress.<sup>8</sup>

15 Children experience acute psychological stress upon separation from their 16 parents, which trauma may be especially severe when the separation is sudden or 17 forcible, and may lead to inconsolable crying, anger, and desperate attempts to locate 18 the parent.<sup>9</sup> Children may show signs of regression, reverting to crying and bed-wetting, 19 or suffer from the loss of important developmental milestones.<sup>10</sup> The longer the duration

1 of separation, the greater harm the child will experience.<sup>11</sup> And such trauma may have 2 lasting effects. Stress hormones induce a state of hypervigilance that alters a child's 3 cognition and emotion, causes chronic problems with how the child responds to stress 4 over a lifetime, increasing the risk of psychological and physical health problems, 5 including depression, substance abuse, and reduced capacity to regulate emotions.<sup>12</sup>

6 The trauma experienced by adults due to forcible separation from their children 7 is associated with an elevated risk of psychiatric disorders, including PTSD, and can 8 induce physiological changes, such as dysregulated stress responses, amygdala 9 hyperactivity, and deficits in prefrontal cortex control of the amygdala that is associated 10 with difficulty regulating fear.<sup>13</sup> Physical and mental effects of the trauma may include 11 PTSD, anxiety, depression, suicidal ideation, loss of appetite, and loss of sleep.<sup>14</sup> One 12 parent forcibly separated from his child reportedly was driven to suicide.<sup>15</sup> Plaintiffs 13 and class members have already suffered such trauma and consequent injury.<sup>16</sup>

14 E. Parents and Children Require Trauma-Informed Family Mental Health 15 Screenings and Services to Address the Government-Inflicted Trauma.

16 Separated families require mental health screening and services to address the 17 trauma of family separation. The treatment must be evidence-based and trauma-18 informed, meaning that it must be designed specifically to alleviate the psychological

1 and neurobiological consequences of family separation.<sup>17</sup> In order for these services to 2 be effective, families must be reunited quickly as trauma grows more pervasive and 3 intense when separation is prolonged.<sup>18</sup> Parents and children must be immediately 4 screened, so that treatment plans may be developed.<sup>19</sup> Mental health services must be 5 delivered in a culturally and linguistically sensitive manner by mental health clinicians 6 trained in evidence-based trauma-informed interventions.<sup>20</sup> And these services must be 7 provided to the family as a whole in an environment that does not continue or prolong 8 the trauma and for a sufficient period of time to effectively mitigate the harm the 9 government caused, including after release from detention.<sup>21</sup>

10 F. Mental Health Services Provided by the Government Are Not 11 Sufficient.

12 Mental health services provided by the government in detention facilities range 13 from sporadic to nonexistent. Family detention centers operated by the Office of 14 Refugee Resettlement (ORR) do not routinely provide mental health services, and in 15 centers detaining minors, ORR provides only general case management personnel and 16 mental health follow-up services without trauma-informed mental health services.<sup>22</sup> 17 Some “clinicians” at such centers are not licensed mental health professionals,<sup>23</sup> and the 18 government has not offered any of the Plaintiffs mental health screenings or services.

19 Immigration detention facilities do not provide the conditions necessary for 20 trauma-informed therapy to be effective. The conditions in law-enforcement detention 21 facilities are highly stressful and do not provide children with adequate opportunities 22 for positive, social-emotional support.<sup>24</sup> Because Plaintiffs, class members, and their 23 children experienced trauma while in detention at the hands of those in control of the

3 LEGAL STANDARD

4 In a facial attack under Rule 12(b)(1), the defendant “asserts that the allegations 5 in the complaint are insufficient on their face to invoke [subject matter] jurisdiction,” 6 and all inferences are drawn in plaintiffs’ favor. Safe Air for Everyone v. Meyer, 373 7 F.3d 1035, 1039 (9th Cir. 2004).

8 Similarly, a complaint attacked by a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss needs to 9 plead “only enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face,” Bell Atl.
10 Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 547 (2007), with all factual allegations “taken as true 11 and construed in the light most favorable to [p]laintiffs.” Epstein v. Wash. Energy Co., 12 83 F.3d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir.1996). Such motions to dismiss are “viewed with disfavor” 13 and rarely granted. Gilligan v. Jamco Dev. Corp., 108 F. 3d 246, 249 (9th Cir. 1997).
14 A complaint survives dismissal as long as there is “any set of facts consistent with the 15 allegations in the complaint’ that would entitle the plaintiff to relief.” Twombly, 550 16 U.S. at 563; Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679 (2009).

17 In deciding a motion to dismiss under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(3), 18 the pleadings need not be accepted as true, and the Court may consider facts outside the 19 pleadings. Murphy v. Schneider Nat’l, Inc., 362 F.3d 1133, 1137 (9th Cir. 2004).

20 ARGUMENT

21 I. PLAINTIFFS’ CLAIMS ARE NOT MOOT.

22 The government does not come close to meeting the “heavy” “burden of 23 demonstrating mootness.” Williams v. I.N.S., 795 F.2d 738, 741 (9th Cir. 1986).
24 Whether a case is moot turns on the “basic question ‘whether decision of a once living 25 dispute continues to be justified by a sufficient prospect that the decision will have an 26 impact on the parties.’” Id. “An action ‘becomes moot only when it is impossible for a 27

28 <sup>25</sup> Id.

1 court to grant any effectual relief whatever to the prevailing party.’” Bayer v. Neiman
 2 Marcus Grp., Inc., 861 F.3d 853, 862 (9th Cir. 2017) (citation omitted).

3 The government makes two mootness arguments, neither of which are supported 4 by law or logic. First, the government contends that this case is moot because the named 5 Plaintiffs have been released and reunited with their children. Defs.’ Mem. in Supp. of 6 Mot. to Dismiss (“Memo”) at 7. This argument misses the point of Plaintiffs’ claims 7 entirely. Plaintiffs allege that the government is required to provide appropriate and 8 effective treatment of the trauma inflicted by its unconstitutional misconduct and that 9 reunification of families is only one of several conditions of such treatment. See, e.g., 10 Comp. ¶ 151 (reunification is necessary to treat trauma); see also id. ¶¶ 152–64 (other 11 conditions necessary for effective treatment, including screening, a therapeutic 12 environment, provision of therapy to the entire family, and provision of services in a 13 culturally competent manner by trained clinicians). The named Plaintiffs have been 14 released and reunited with their children, but they have not received treatment for the 15 government-inflicted trauma pursuant to the government’s ongoing obligation to 16 provide such care during and following detention. Thus, this Court can still order 17 effective relief and the action is not moot. See, e.g., Ecological Rights Found. v. Pac.
 18 Lumber Co., 230 F.3d 1141, 1153 (9th Cir. 2000).<sup>26</sup>

19 The government cites a line of cases in which the plaintiffs were denied 20 injunctions restraining the government from repeating the conduct that injured them.<sup>27</sup>

21 _____
 22 <sup>26</sup> Moreover, even if release could render the individual claims moot—and it could 23 not—where a claim is “so inherently transitory that the . . . court will not have . . .
 24 enough time to rule on a motion for class certification before the proposed 25 representative’s individual interest expires . . . the ‘relation back’ doctrine is properly 26 invoked to preserve the merits of the case for judicial resolution.” Haro v. Sebelius, 747 27 F.3d 1099, 1110 (9th Cir. 2014) (quoting Cty of Riverside v. McLaughlin, 500 U.S. 44, 28 52 (1991)).

<sup>27</sup> See Memo 6–9, citing Adler v. Duval Sch. Bd., 112 F.3d 1475, 1477 (11th Cir. 1997) (request to enjoin school board from allowing prayers at graduation moot after named plaintiffs’ graduation); City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 107 (1983) (plaintiff subjected to a chokehold lacked standing to seek injunction forbidding future use of chokeholds); Friends of the Earth, Inc. v. Bergland, 576 F.2d 1377, 1379 (9th Cir. 1978)

1 But these cases are inapposite. Here, the thrust of Plaintiffs’ injunctive relief is to 2 require the government to fulfill an existing obligation: to provide the mental health 3 services to which Plaintiffs are entitled.

4 Moreover, there is a realistic possibility that the government will re-engage in 5 misconduct. Indeed, on October 12, 2018, the Washington Post reported that “[t]he 6 White House is actively considering plans that could again separate parents and children 7 at the U.S.-Mexico border, hoping to reverse soaring numbers of families attempting to 8 cross illegally into the United States.”<sup>28</sup> President Trump confirmed this intention the 9 next day, arguing as reported in the Washington Post that “family separations likely 10 would help scare away some undocumented migrants from trying to enter the United 11 States.”<sup>29</sup> Trump stated: “If they feel there will be separation, they won’t come.” Id.
 12 The risk of renewed misconduct is thus quite real. See Reyes v. Educ. Credit Mgmt.
 13 Corp., 322 F.R.D. 552, 569–70 (S.D. Cal. 2017) (“For mootness to apply based on the 14 voluntary cessation of the complained of unlawful behavior, the party must prove that 15 subsequent events make it absolutely clear that the allegedly wrongful behavior could 16 not reasonably be expected to recur.”), appeal docketed, No. 17-56930 (9th Cir. Dec.

2 Second, the government briefly contends that Plaintiffs’ claims became moot 3 “within the past month, which constituted a reasonable post-release transitional-care 4 period.” Memo at 7. This assertion lacks any factual or legal support and also invites 5 the Court to resolve against Plaintiffs factual questions informing the duration of the 6 government’s obligation to provide mental health care services after release from 7 detention. As the Ninth Circuit recognized in Wakefield v. Thompson, “the state must 8 provide an outgoing prisoner who is receiving and continues to require medication with 9 a supply sufficient to ensure that he has that medication available during the period of 10 time reasonably necessary to permit him to consult a doctor and obtain a new supply.” 11 177 F.3d 1160, 1164 (9th Cir. 1999) (emphasis added); see also Hernandez v. Cty. of 12 Monterey, 110 F. Supp. 3d 929, 958 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (“[T]he jail has an obligation to 13 provide newly-released inmates medicinal supplies sufficient to ensure that he has that 14 medication available during the period of time reasonably necessary to permit him to 15 consult a doctor and obtain a new supply.”); Lugo v. Senkowski, 114 F. Supp. 2d 111, 16 115 (N.D.N.Y. 2000). Here, how long the government’s obligations to Plaintiffs and 17 _____

18 <sup>30</sup> The government relies heavily on Hodgers-Durgin as showing that plaintiffs’ injury 19 is “too speculative” and relies on “past injury.” But Hodgers-Durgin is readily 20 distinguishable. In that case, the court upheld summary judgment against plaintiffs who 21 sought an injunction to prevent roving Border Patrol operations that allegedly violated 22 the Fourth Amendment. Hodgers-Durgin, 199 F.3d at 1039. The named plaintiffs 23 sought to represent a class of “all persons who have been, are, or will be traveling at 24 night by motor vehicle” on state highways in eight Arizona counties, and “all persons 25 who are of Latin, Hispanic or Mexican appearance who have been, are, or will be 26 traveling by motor vehicle on [those] highways.” Id. at 1040. The Ninth Circuit denied 27 equitable relief because plaintiffs could not establish “likelihood of substantial and 28 immediate irreparable injury,” because it was not sufficiently likely the named plaintiffs would be stopped again by the Border Patrol. Id. at 1044. The court specifically relied on the factual record showing that the named plaintiffs drove hundreds of miles a week and observed Border Patrol agents “all over the place,” but were “stopped only once in 10 years.” Id. Here, the factual record has not yet been developed (nor can it be considered on a motion to dismiss), and Plaintiffs are entitled to discovery, including on the government’s renewed consideration of family separation. Moreover, here the risk of repeating past misconduct is clearly more likely than in Hodgers-Durgin, and the injunctive relief aims to require the government to fulfill an ongoing obligation.

1 the class under Wakefield run—that is, how much time is reasonably necessary for 2 Plaintiffs and class members to obtain the needed mental health care on their own—3 will be explored in discovery; the question cannot be resolved on a motion to dismiss 4 based on the government’s unsupported assertion. Dahlia v. Rodriguez, 735 F.3d 1060, 5 1076 (9th Cir. 2013) (under Rule 12(b)(6), the “task is not to resolve any factual dispute, 6 but merely to determine whether [plaintiff’s] allegations support a reasonable 7 inference” that defendant violated the law).

8 Moreover, Wakefield is not Plaintiffs’ only basis for seeking injunctive relief. As 9 Plaintiffs explained in support of their motion for a preliminary injunction, they are 10 entitled to injunctive relief pursuant to the state-created danger doctrine. The 11 government inflicted the trauma suffered by Plaintiffs by separating them from their 12 families. It therefore has a duty to provide post-release mental health services adequate 13 to address the ongoing danger of harm resulting from the trauma it caused. The 14 government does not refute this argument (indeed, does not even mention it). Even were 15 the Court to credit the government’s unsupported assertion that its obligations under 16 Wakefield have expired, Plaintiffs’ showing under the state-created danger doctrine 17 mandates a conclusion that their claims are not moot.

18 II. PLAINTIFFS STATE A CLAIM FOR RELIEF.

19 Plaintiffs allege that the government violated and continues to violate their 20 substantive due process rights under the Fifth Amendment, and seek an order directing 21 the government to provide them effective mental health screening and treatment on two 22 independent grounds. First, the government’s separation of Plaintiffs and class members 23 from their children, which has already been found likely to violate due process and 24 shock the conscience, directly and foreseeably injured Plaintiffs and class members, and 25 the government is obligated to remedy the injuries and risk of future injuries that its 26 violations caused. See Kennedy v. City of Ridgefield, 439 F.3d 1055, 1062 (9th Cir.
27 2006) (“this circuit has held state officials liable . . . for their roles in creating or 28 exposing individuals to danger they otherwise would not have faced.”); Wang v. Reno,

1 81 F.3d 808, 813, 818 (9th Cir. 1996) (entering injunction “[t]o remedy the 2 [government’s] due process violations” including “affirmatively plac[ing] [the plaintiff]
3 in danger”). Second, the government is required to provide effective mental health care 4 services to all persons it detains, both during detention and for a reasonable period 5 thereafter. See Wakefield v. Thompson, 177 F.3d 1160, 1164–65 (9th Cir. 1999).

6 State-Created Danger: The government is responsible for addressing the 7 ongoing harm caused to Plaintiffs and class members under the “state-created danger” 8 doctrine, which applies where “the state action ‘affirmatively place[s] the plaintiff in a 9 position of danger,’ that is, where state action creates or exposes an individual to a 10 danger which he or she would not have otherwise faced.” Kennedy, 439 F.3d at 1061.
11 The Ninth Circuit has adopted a three-part test to determine whether this doctrine 12 applies: “(1) whether any affirmative actions of the official placed the individual in 13 danger he otherwise would not have faced; (2) whether the danger was known or 14 obvious; and (3) whether the officer acted with deliberate indifference to that danger.”
15 Henry A. v. Willden, 678 F.3d 991, 1002 (9th Cir. 2012).

16 Plaintiffs have alleged facts that establish each of these prongs. Plaintiffs alleged 17 that the government’s family separation policy placed Plaintiffs and class members in 18 danger that they otherwise would not have faced, and even supported those allegations 19 with expert declarations. For instance, Plaintiffs alleged that “The consensus among 20 leading experts on trauma is that tearing children from their parents inflicts severe 21 complex trauma on both parents and children alike that might never be fully remedied.
22 . . . Left untreated, such trauma causes immediate and long-lasting physical and 23 psychological harm.” Compl. ¶ 127. Plaintiffs also allege that “parents who experience 24 their children being taken away from them will likely suffer acute psychological distress 25 that manifests in physical and mental symptoms of anxiety, depression, suicidal 26 ideation, loss of appetite and/or loss of sleep.” Id. ¶ 128. Plaintiffs further allege they 27 personally “experienced distress and symptoms such as losing sense of time, inability 28 to eat, and sleeplessness” and “trouble concentrating.” Id. ¶¶ 142–43.

1 Plaintiffs also alleged facts showing that the danger that separating families 2 would inflict trauma on parents and children was known and obvious to the government.
3 See, e.g., id. ¶¶ 97, 127. Any doubt that the government was aware of this danger is 4 eliminated by the testimony of ORR’s Deputy Director for Children’s Programs before 5 the Senate Judiciary Committee that “there is no question, that separation of children 6 from parents entail[s] significant potential for traumatic psychological injury to the 7 child” and that ORR “raised concerns about the effect on children” during the 8 deliberative process over the family separation policy.<sup>31</sup> And given Plaintiffs’ detailed 9 allegations of the reactions of the separated families, the government cannot plausibly 10 claim that the traumatic effects of its policy were not obvious. See, e.g., Compl. ¶ 132
11 (audio recording of detained children “repeatedly scream[ing] ‘Mami’ and ‘Papa,’ 12 many crying so hard it sounds like they can barely breathe”); ¶ 107 (children “crying 13 uncontrollably, having panic attacks, not sleeping, wetting the bed, and regressing to 14 the point that they can no longer talk”); ¶ 130 (father committed suicide after being 15 forcibly separated from his child). Moreover, the government claims to have screened 16 Plaintiffs, but has not indicated whether it shared the results with them to enable them 17 to understand their diagnoses and needs, and request mental health services.

18 Lastly, Plaintiffs allege facts showing that the government acted with deliberate 19 indifference to the known danger that family separation would inflict trauma and was 20 inflicting trauma. Indeed, they allege facts showing that deliberate indifference and 21 gratuitous cruelty was present at all levels of government. At the facilities where 22 families were separated, “[g]uards . . . taunted mothers,” “told the parents that a new 23 law permitted them to take away their children permanently,” and threw food on the 24 floor instead of handing it to Plaintiff R.M. Id. ¶¶ 18, 25, 146. President Trump likewise

1 dehumanized Plaintiffs and class members, saying that “[t]hese aren’t people. These are 2 animals.” Id. ¶ 92. And Plaintiffs allege that, despite the government’s knowledge that 3 its policy would inflict trauma, it provided no trauma-informed mental health screenings 4 or services to address those harms. Id. ¶ 147. The government makes essentially no 5 effort to rebut these showings, which Plaintiffs explained at length in support of their 6 preliminary injunction motion. Dkt. Nos. 45, 119.

7       The government has no answer to Plaintiffs’ showing that they and the class are 8 entitled to relief under the state-created danger doctrine, and has effectively conceded 9 this point. Indeed, the government spends just one paragraph and one footnote 10 addressing Plaintiffs’ claim that they are entitled to an injunction. Memo at 11 n.3, 14– 11 15. Instead of addressing Plaintiffs’ contentions head on, the government takes issue 12 with Plaintiffs’ citation to Kennedy in their reply in support of their motion for class 13 certification. Id. at 11 n.3, citing Dkt. No. 120 at 4. The government’s attempt to 14 distinguish Kennedy fails; Kennedy holds that government officials may be liable for 15 creating or exposing individuals to danger they would not otherwise have faced, as the 16 government has done here. 439 F.3d at 1062; see also Wang, 81 F.3d at 813, 818 17 (entering injunction “[t]o remedy the due process violations” committed by the 18 government including by “affirmatively plac[ing] [the plaintiff] in danger”). The 19 government also rehashes its argument that psychological trauma cannot serve as the 20 basis for injunctive relief. Memo at 15. But as discussed above, the cases cited by the 21 government involve injunctions to prevent recurrence of past conduct. Here, Plaintiffs 22 seek to require the government to fulfill an ongoing duty and to address the continuing 23 harms it caused.

24       Duty to provide care during detention and a reasonable time thereafter: 25 While virtually ignoring its obligations under the “state-created danger” doctrine, the 26 government focuses heavily on a tortured attempt to evade and distinguish Wakefield.
27 Defendants concede that Plaintiffs were entitled to “constitutionally adequate” mental 28 health screening and services when detained. See Memo at 10, 13. But the government

1 summarily concludes, citing “[s]ee generally Compl.,” that “Plaintiffs have not 2 adequately pled that the care available to them is or was inadequate.” Id. at 12. Contrary 3 to this unsupported argument, there is no doubt that Plaintiffs have alleged that they 4 were given no effective mental health care screening or treatment in detention.

5 Specifically, the Complaint sufficiently alleged that “Plaintiffs have not received 6 trauma-informed mental-health screenings or services to address the harms suffered.”
7 Compl. ¶ 147; see also id. ¶ 168 (plaintiffs “have not been provided with appropriate 8 mental-health screening or offered appropriate trauma-informed intervention”); ¶ 171 9 (defendants “fail[ed] to provide adequate medical care for detained individuals and to 10 remedy the harms inflicted.”). The Complaint also alleged supporting facts specific to 11 each named plaintiff. Compl. ¶ 23 (J.P. did not report having access to mental-health 12 treatment despite being evaluated by a licensed clinical social worker for symptoms of 13 PTSD, depression, and anxiety as a result of being separated from her daughter); ¶¶ 32, 14 43 (neither J.O. nor R.M. “received any mental-health or counseling services from the 15 government to address the trauma”). These allegations are sufficient to adequately plead 16 a claim that the government has provided no such services to Plaintiffs and class 17 members.

18 Perhaps aware of the flimsy nature of their attacks on Plaintiffs’ pleading, the 19 government also suggests that Plaintiffs’ claims should be dismissed because Plaintiffs 20 did not request mental health services and that its provision of an “intake form” 21 somehow satisfied its obligations. Neither argument passes muster.

22 First, the government’s contention that Plaintiffs did not request mental health 23 services unreasonably seeks to shift the burden to provide adequate care to the people 24 it has traumatized. In reality, parents who have been torn from their children by the 25 government “are unlikely to ask for help or speak of their distress with anyone who 26 holds power over them” because of the difficulty of creating a bond of trust with them.
27 See Supplemental Joint Expert Declaration of Kenneth Berrick and John Sprinson 28 (“Suppl. Berrick Decl.”), Dkt. No. 119-4, ¶ 16; see also Supplemental Declaration of 1 Dr. Jose Hidalgo (“Suppl. Hidalgo Decl.”), Dkt. No. 119-5, ¶¶ 8–9. If the government

2 knows that its own conduct created a significant risk of harm, then it must treat it. See, 3 e.g., Clement v. Gomez, 298 F.3d 898, 906 (9th Cir. 2002).

4 Second, the government cannot fulfill its burden to provide adequate mental 5 health care by giving Plaintiffs and other class members an intake form. See Def’s Opp.
6 Pl.’s Mot. Prelim. Inj. 16 (citing Declaration of Codi James, Psy.D., Dkt. No. 109-2, ¶¶ 7 4–6). The form is definitely not treatment; it is hardly a screening tool either. This form 8 asks extremely general questions about whether the detainee has had past mental 9 illness, is in withdrawal from alcohol or drugs, or is feeling sad, and asks no questions
10 to determine whether the detainee needs treatment for trauma.<sup>32</sup> The questions the form 11 does ask are not validated to screen for trauma, certainly not recent, severe, acute, and 12 ongoing trauma.<sup>33</sup> Worse still, the government is aware of the limitations of this form,<sup>34</sup> 13 and its availability only in English and Spanish likely makes it inaccessible to many 14 detainees.<sup>35</sup> The government cannot be allowed to dismiss this case on the basis of 15 providing such an inadequate “screening” tool.

16 Additionally, the government provided no evidence here, or in other court filings, 17 that it used even this inadequate form for Plaintiffs and class members outside of the 18 Federal Detention Center-SeaTac that was referenced in the James Declaration. See 19 generally James Decl. There is good reason to think they do not—the form proffered 20 by the government states that it is a Bureau of Prisons form, and there is no indication

21 _____
22 <sup>32</sup> Suppl. Berrick Decl. ¶¶ 11–12.

23 <sup>33</sup> The lack of such questions is striking given that Congressional testimony revealed 24 that the government knew that trauma would occur. Supra 12. Moreover, a screening 25 tool requires validated questions because of the high likelihood of false negatives due 26 to lack of trust in one’s captors, stigma surrounding mental healthcare, the lack of 27 confidentiality assurances, etc. See Suppl. Berrick Decl. ¶ 11; Suppl. Hidalgo Decl. ¶ 7.

28 <sup>34</sup> The government uses a different form to screen for PTSD in other contexts, but failed to use that form here. See Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration, Abbreviated PTSD Checklist—Civilian Version, [https://www.integration.samhsa.gov/

<sup>35</sup> Plaintiff J.P., for example, “understands very little Spanish and no English.” Gee Decl. ¶ 15.

1 that it is used in ICE-owned detention facilities, state prisons and jails, or other places
2 Plaintiffs and class members may be detained. See generally Declaration of Luis A.
3 Cortes Romero, Dkt. No. 119-3, ¶ 8; Declaration of Lucero Chavez, Dkt. No. 119-2, ¶ 5 4 (Plaintiff J.P. received no mental health screening form); Supplemental Declaration of 5 R.M. ¶ 2.

6 The government also summarily argues that its post-release obligation to provide 7 care—to the extent it exists at all—“lasts only for a very short period of time” and that 8 this obligation has been fulfilled. Memo at 10. The government, however, offers no 9 authority to support its contention of the nature of its obligation, nor that this obligation 10 has been fulfilled. Nor can it, as the pleading described above controls at this stage of 11 the proceedings. See Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 763 (9th Cir. 2007) (When 12 considering a motion to dismiss, a district court “consider[s] only allegations contained 13 in the pleadings, exhibits attached to the complaint, and matters properly subject to 14 judicial notice.”). The scope of transition services will be explored in discovery; it 15 cannot be resolved on a motion to dismiss on the government’s unsupported assertion.<sup>36</sup>

16 Finally, the government argues that dismissal is appropriate since Plaintiffs “have 17 had ample time to obtain mental health care” and any failure to do so “put their claims 18 for ‘transitional’ care at risk.” Memo at 13. Once again, there is nothing in the 19 Complaint that supports these allegations, and it is wholly inappropriate for the Court 20 to accept the government’s narrative in summarily denying Plaintiffs their day in 21

22
23 <sup>36</sup> Indeed, Charles v. County of Orange, suggests that the post-detention obligation for 24 mental health treatment extends beyond a “very short period.” The government cites 25 Charles, but fails to mention that the court found that plaintiffs may have been owed 26 treatment for “a year and eight months, respectively” post-release. No. 16-CV-5527 27 (NSR), 2017 WL 4402576, at *9 (S.D.N.Y. Sept. 29, 2017). Moreover, the 28 government’s emphasis on the court’s statement that the claim in Charles was akin to negligence or medical malpractice seeks to distract this Court from the fact that the government’s actions here are a far cry from mere negligence; unlike in Charles, the government through its unconstitutional policy itself intentionally inflicted the trauma giving rise to the need for the treatment that the government then failed to provide.

1 Court.<sup>37</sup> “Defendants may not, in a motion to dismiss, simply assert their own 2 unsupported version of the facts and ask the Court to reject Plaintiff’s claim on that 3 basis.” See Villa v. Maricopa Cty., No. CV-14-01681-PHX-DJH, 2015 WL 11118113, 4 at *9 (D. Ariz. Mar. 4, 2015); Kwai Fun Wong v. United States, 373 F.3d 952 (9th Cir.
5 2004) (declining on motion to dismiss to “decide far-reaching constitutional questions 6 on a nonexistent factual record.”).

7 Plaintiffs’ Complaint states a claim, pursuant both to the state created danger 8 doctrine and Wakefield, and cannot be dismissed pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6).

9 III. SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY DOES NOT BAR PLAINTIFFS’ CLAIMS.

10 The government advances three arguments in support of its position that 11 sovereign immunity bars Plaintiffs’ claims. None has merit. First, the government 12 mischaracterizes Plaintiffs’ request for injunctive and declaratory relief as a request for 13 “money damages” to try to escape the blanket waiver of sovereign immunity in the 14 Administrative Procedure Act (“APA”), 5 U.S.C. § 702. Memo at 17–18. But 15 dispositive Supreme Court and Ninth Circuit case law holds that Plaintiffs’ requested 16 relief does not constitute “money damages” under the APA, and is thus within its 17 immunity waiver. Second, the government contends that the Federal Tort Claims Act 18 (“FTCA”) provides an exclusive remedy for Plaintiffs (Memo at 19), but this simply 19 recasts its first argument, as the FTCA provides an exclusive remedy only if the plaintiff 20 seeks “money damages,” which Plaintiffs do not. 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b). Third, in a 21 footnote, the government halfheartedly contends that the APA’s waiver of sovereign 22 immunity is limited by other APA provisions providing for review of “final agency 23 action,” Memo at 17 n.4, but this position is foreclosed by Ninth Circuit case law.
24 Sovereign immunity is no bar here.

25 <sup>37</sup> The government also callously attempts to minimize Plaintiffs’ claims by comparing 26 the constitutional requirement to address the long-lasting emotional anguish resulting 27 from its purposeful policy to separate families to detainees with “chest pains” 28 demanding facilities have a cardiologist on staff. Memo 14. As their Complaint makes clear, Plaintiffs are requesting only that to which they are entitled, effective mental health screening and care to remedy the harm that the government inflicted on them.

1           The Injunctive Relief Plaintiffs Seek Is Not Money Damages: The APA 2 provides that a federal court action “seeking relief other than money damages . . . shall 3 not be dismissed nor relief therein be denied on the ground that it is against the United 4 States.” 5 U.S.C § 702. This provision waives sovereign immunity for the injunctive 5 relief Plaintiffs seek. In an obvious attempt to escape this waiver, the government has 6 misconstrued Plaintiffs’ request for injunctive relief as seeking “the legal equivalent of 7 monetary damages” (Memo at 17) despite the fact that the Complaint does not ask the 8 Court to award damages, or indeed any form of monetary relief. See Compl. pp. 59–60.
9 Based on this twisting of Plaintiffs’ request, the government contends that the APA does 10 not apply, and that sovereign immunity bars Plaintiffs’ claims. Memo at 17.

11           The government is wrong. Injunctive relief is not the same as money damages, 12 even if the government has to expend funds to provide the relief. In Bowen v.
13 Massachusetts, the Supreme Court rejected the exact argument the government makes 14 here. 487 U.S. 879 (1988). In that case, Massachusetts sought an injunction requiring 15 the federal government to make certain Medicaid reimbursement payments and alleged 16 that the government waived sovereign immunity via the APA. Id. at 885–87. The 17 government contended that the APA’s waiver did not apply because the suit sought to 18 compel the government to make monetary payments, and therefore did not “see[k] relief 19 other than money damages.” Id. at 891. The Court rejected the government’s position 20 for two independent reasons, both of which apply here. First, the Court held that “insofar 21 as the complaints sought declaratory and injunctive relief, they were certainly not 22 actions for money damages.” Id. at 893; see also Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.) v. United 23 States, 870 F.2d 518, 525 (9th Cir. 1989) (5 U.S.C. § 702 “is an unqualified waiver of 24 sovereign immunity in actions seeking non-monetary relief against legal wrongs for 25 which governmental agencies are accountable.”). This holding alone disposes of the 26 government’s argument because Plaintiffs seek only declaratory and injunctive relief 27 which is “certainly not” an action for money damages.

28           Second, the Bowen Court held that Massachusetts’ suit was not seeking “money

1 damages” within the meaning of the APA, even though it was seeking monetary relief, 2 because it was not “a suit seeking money in compensation for the damage sustained by 3 the failure of the Federal Government to pay as mandated; rather, it is a suit seeking to 4 enforce the statutory mandate itself, which happens to be one for the payment of 5 money.” 487 U.S. at 900. Here, the injunctive relief Plaintiffs seek does not even require 6 the government to pay Plaintiffs or class members any money.

7 Contrary to the government’s position, courts routinely find that the APA’s 8 sovereign immunity waiver applies even where the injunctive relief would require the 9 government to expend funds. See, e.g., Marceau v. Blackfeet Hous. Auth., 540 F.3d 916, 10 929 (9th Cir. 2008) (demand for injunction requiring federal government to repair or 11 rebuild the plaintiffs’ houses was not a demand for “money damages” under the APA); 12 Tucson Airport Auth. v. Gen. Dynamics Corp., 136 F.3d 641, 645 (9th Cir. 1998)
13 (indemnification action is not a suit for “money damages” outside the APA’s waiver).

14 In a futile attempt to distinguish this dispositive case law, the government cites 15 Department of the Army v. Blue Fox, Inc., 525 U.S. 255 (1999), to contend that 16 sovereign immunity bars Plaintiffs’ request for an injunction requiring the government 17 to provide appropriate mental health care to families it injured because that injunction 18 is supposedly “substitute relief” rather than “specific relief.” Memo at 18. But the 19 government’s argument is contrary to the plain meaning of the APA’s waiver, which 20 excludes only money damages, not all kinds of “substitute relief.” Blue Fox is not to the 21 contrary. It holds that where a plaintiff seeks an equitable lien against the government 22 with an aim “to seize or attach money in the hands of the Government as compensation 23 for [a] loss,” that lien constitutes a claim for money damages, but that holding stands 24 only for the proposition, irrelevant here, that where a plaintiff is seeking money as 25 substitute relief, the APA’s waiver does not apply. 525 U.S. at 263. Blue Fox says 26 nothing about the relief sought in this case, which does not require the government to 27 pay money to Plaintiffs or class members.

28 Tellingly, the government cites no post-Bowen case finding non-monetary

1 injunctive relief constituted “money damages” under the APA. The cases the 2 government does cite provide no support for its position. Memo at 18. In Hubbard v.
 3 EPA, the court held the APA’s waiver of sovereign immunity did not waive sovereign 4 immunity for backpay. 982 F.2d 531, 539 (D.C. Cir. 1992). As in Blue Fox, but unlike 5 here, the plaintiff in Hubbard sought to force the government to pay him money directly, 6 not provide non-monetary injunctive relief. The government also cites Eric v. Secretary
 7 of U.S. Department of Housing & Urban Development, a district court case predating 8 Bowen applying a standard that the Bowen Court held incorrect—that any injunctive 9 relief that requires the federal government to make expenditures constitutes “money 10 damages” under the APA. See 464 F. Supp. 44, 48 (D. Alaska 1978). Accordingly, 11 Bowen overruled Eric on the exact point for which the government cites it.<sup>38</sup>

12 The government also suggests, without support, that because Plaintiffs could 13 have brought money damages claims, the APA’s sovereign immunity waiver does not 14 apply. Memo at 18. Whether Plaintiffs could have sought money damages, they did not, 15 and the APA waives sovereign immunity for their claims. See Trudeau v. FTC, 456 16 F.3d 178, 187 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (sovereign immunity waived where plaintiff “limited 17 the relief he seeks to a declaratory judgment and an injunction”).

18 The government’s attempt to contort Plaintiff’s request for declaratory and 19 injunctive relief that will not require the government to pay them any money into a 20 claim for “money damages” defies both law and logic. The Court should reject it.

21 The FTCA Is Not An Exclusive Remedy for Plaintiffs: The government wrongly 22 contends that Plaintiffs’ claims for injunctive relief are barred because, “[a]ccording to 23 28 U.S.C. § 2679(a), for actions sounding in tort against the United States, an action for 24 money damages under [28 U.S.C.] § 1346(b) is the exclusive avenue available.” Memo

25 <sup>38</sup> The government cites two inapposite cases that do not suggest Plaintiffs’ claims 26 should be construed as seeking “money damages.” Memo 18. Rosebrock v. Mathis
 27 found a request for a “reparative injunction” moot; it does not discuss the APA. 745 28 F.3d 963 (9th Cir. 2014). DeSilva v. Donovan found plaintiffs lacked standing because it was “unclear” how the proposed relief “would remedy [their] past injuries”; it did not discuss sovereign immunity. 81 F. Supp. 3d 20, 26 (D.D.C. 2015).

1 at 19. These statutes’ plain language forecloses the government’s position.

2 28 U.S.C. § 2679(a) provides that “[t]he authority of any federal agency to sue 3 and be sued in its own name shall not be construed to authorize suits against such federal 4 agency on claims which are cognizable under section 1346(b) of this title, and the 5 remedies provided by this title in such cases shall be exclusive.” Thus, if a suit is not 6 “cognizable” under 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b), this exclusive remedy provision does not 7 apply. 28 U.S.C. § 1346(b)(1), in turn, provides:

8 . . . the district courts . . . shall have exclusive jurisdiction of civil actions 9 on claims against the United States, for money damages . . . for injury or 10 loss of property, or personal injury or death caused by the negligent or 11 wrongful act or omission of any employee of the Government while acting 12 within the scope of his office or employment, under circumstances where 13 the United States, if a private person, would be liable to the claimant in 14 accordance with the law of the place where the act or omission occurred.

15 (emphasis added). To be “cognizable,” i.e., actionable, under § 1346(b), a claim must 16 “alleg[e] the six elements outlined above.” F.D.I.C. v. Meyer, 510 U.S. 471, 477 17 (1994).<sup>39</sup> Here, Plaintiffs’ claims do not allege all six elements: Plaintiffs do not seek 18 money damages. Their claims thus are not “cognizable” under § 1346(b) and in turn not 19 subject to § 2679(a)’s exclusive remedy provision.

20 The APA’s Sovereign Immunity Waiver Is Not Limited By Other Provisions:

21 In a footnote, the government suggests that there is a “dispute” in this circuit whether 22 the sovereign immunity waiver in 5 U.S.C. § 702 is limited by 5 U.S.C. § 704’s 23 provision that agency actions are only reviewable under the APA if they are final and 24 there is no other adequate remedy. Memo at 17 n.4. The government is wrong—as the 25 Ninth Circuit made clear just last year, the APA’s sovereign immunity waiver is not 26 limited by other provisions of the APA. See Navajo Nation v. Dep’t of the Interior, 876 27 F.3d 1144, 1172 (9th Cir. 2017) (5 U.S.C. § 702 “waives sovereign immunity broadly 28

<sup>39</sup> Simmons v. Himmelreich, 136 S. Ct. 1843, 1846–47 (2016), cited by the government (Memo 19) is not to the contrary. It states in a parenthetical that 28 U.S.C. § 2679(a) provides that plaintiffs “cannot sue agency for claims within scope of FTCA.” But Plaintiffs’ claims are not for money damages so are not within the scope of the FTCA.

1 for all causes of action that meet its terms,” whereas 5 U.S.C. § 704’s “‘final agency 2 action limitation’ applies only to APA claims”); see also Trudeau, 456 F.3d at 186 (“We 3 have previously, and repeatedly, [held] that the APA’s waiver of sovereign immunity 4 applies to any suit whether under the APA or not.”).

5 Here, of course, Plaintiffs do not bring a claim under the APA; instead, they 6 allege that the government has violated their substantive due process rights, as well as 7 the Equal Protection Guarantee of the Fifth Amendment’s Due Process Clause. See 8 Compl. ¶¶ 172–85. Under Navajo Nation, the APA’s sovereign immunity waiver 9 applies regardless whether Plaintiffs have met the requirements of an APA claim 10 (including final agency action and absence of another adequate remedy). The 11 government’s suggestion that this issue is “unsettled” is incorrect.

12 In sum, because Plaintiffs are not seeking money damages, the APA’s sovereign 13 immunity waiver applies, and sovereign immunity does not bar Plaintiffs’ claims.

14 IV. THIS CASE IS NOT DUPLICATIVE OF *MS. L.

15 The government argues that this action is duplicative of Ms. L. and should be 16 dismissed because “[Plaintiffs] allege the same class qualifications as Ms. L. and are 17 merely splitting their claim for relief.” Memo at 19. The government’s arguments are 18 wrong and misconstrue the issues in this case. The government acknowledges that for 19 an action to be duplicative, “‘the causes of action and relief sought, as well as the parties 20 or privies to the action are the same.’” Id. at 19 (quoting Adams v. Cal. Dep’t of Health 21 Servs., 487 F.3d 684, 689 (9th Cir. 2007)). Here, the causes of action and relief sought 22 differ meaningfully. This case is not duplicative of Ms. L.

23 The government primarily contends that “Plaintiffs allege the same harm as in 24 the Ms. L. litigation, namely family separation and conditions of detention.” Memo at 25 20. But the issue before the court in Ms. L. is whether the government’s family 26 separation policy violated the Ms. L. plaintiffs’ substantive due process right to family 27 integrity. The relief sought in Ms. L. is a determination that the family separation policy 28 was in fact unconstitutional and an injunction ordering the government to reunite

1 parents and children separated under the policy. By contrast, the issues here are whether 2 a deliberate policy of inflicting trauma on individuals through family separation itself 3 creates a separate constitutional claim, whether, and to what extent, the government has 4 an obligation to provide mental healthcare to those separated individuals during 5 detention and separation and after release and reunification, and whether the 6 government failed and continues to fail to fulfill its obligations to Plaintiffs and the 7 proposed class.<sup>40</sup> Moreover, in the instant action, the government’s due process 8 violations are ongoing in light of the government’s continuing failure to provide 9 adequate mental health care.

10 For this reason and contrary to the government’s assertion, the two actions also 11 do not “rely on substantially the same evidence.” Memo at 19–20. Unlike in Ms. L, 12 Plaintiffs here have presented and will present evidence of the government’s intent to 13 inflict trauma through its family separation policy, of the nature and extent of the severe 14 and continuing trauma inflicted on parents and children by the separations, and of the 15 lack of mental health care provided by the government to these parents and children.

16 The government’s misconception of the issues in this case is exemplified by its 17 claim that “the Ms. L litigation has mooted many of the claims in this case.” Id. at 20.
18 The end of the family separation policy and the reunification of families ordered in Ms.
19 L effectuated the primary relief sought in that case, and it is true that reunification is an 20 important part of addressing the trauma inflicted by the policy. However, reunification 21 is only one piece of what is sought here. The government’s duty to provide adequate 22 mental health care to those deliberately traumatized by its family separation policy 23 extends beyond merely reuniting the families and releasing them from detention.

25 <sup>40</sup> In a footnote, the government says a request in a status report by the Ms. L plaintiffs 26 for a fund for trauma counseling for children “underscores the Government’s argument 27 for dismissal.” Memo 21 n.6. Yet the government concedes that the Ms. L plaintiffs 28 “have not pursued that remedy” in their complaint and does not contend that the request has been granted. Moreover, the request does not change the fact that the issues in the cases are different. The Ms. L plaintiffs do not allege that the government has a constitutional obligation to provide mental health care to the families it traumatized.

1 Although the reunification order in Ms. L. is a step in the right direction, it did not moot 2 any of Plaintiffs’ claims let alone “many” of them. Supra 6–10.

3 The government also confusingly argues that “this lawsuit seeks to modify the 4 Flores settlement,” which applies to children, despite the fact that the government 5 accurately notes that children “are not even parties in this case.” Memo at 21. This case 6 is not an “attempt to undo the Flores bargain.” Id. Plaintiffs and the proposed class, all 7 of whom are parents and none of whom is a plaintiff in Flores, seek adequate mental 8 health care to address the trauma inflicted by the family separation policy. That such 9 mental health care could include, among other things, family centered treatment 10 involving their children does not mean that Plaintiffs are seeking to modify the bargain 11 in Flores.

12 V. VENUE IS PROPER.

13 Contrary to Defendants’ contention, venue is proper in this district under 28 14 U.S.C. § 1391(e)(1) which provides that venue may lie in any judicial district in which 15 (1) “a defendant . . . resides”; (2) “a substantial part of the events or omissions giving 16 rise to the claim occurred”; or (3) “the plaintiff resides if no real property is involved.”

17 First, venue lies in this district because, as the government concedes, two of the 18 defendants—David Marin, LA Field Office Director of ICE, and Lisa Von Nordheim, 19 Warden at the James A. Musick Facility—reside here for venue purposes. Memo at 24; 20 see Tsi Akim Maidu of Taylorsville Rancheria v. U.S. Dep’t of the Interior, No. 16-cv-21 07189-LB, 2017 WL 2289203, at *2 (N.D. Cal. May 25, 2017) (federal officers reside 22 where their official duties are performed). To avoid this necessary conclusion, the 23 government asserts that no substantive or factual allegations are directed at these two 24 Defendants. Memo at 24. This disregards the Complaint’s numerous detailed 25 allegations. While certain high-level decisions may have been made elsewhere, 26 Plaintiffs specifically challenge the failure to provide appropriate mental health 27 treatment at detention facilities, including the James Musick Facility, which is under 28 the supervision of Defendants Von Nordheim and Marin. See, e.g., Compl. ¶¶ 13, 14, 1 16, 21–23, 54, 55, 142–144, 146–147, 148, 168.

2 Second, venue is proper because a substantial part of the events or omissions 3 giving rise to the claims occurred in this judicial district. Plaintiffs’ claims arise from 4 the government’s deliberate infliction of trauma through its separation of parents and 5 children and its failure to provide appropriate mental health screenings and treatment, 6 including during detention. At the time the Complaint was filed, the government 7 detained Plaintiff J.P. in this judicial district, where it kept her separated from her 8 daughter and deprived her of appropriate mental health services.<sup>41</sup> In light of these 9 allegations, Defendants cannot seriously contend that “Plaintiffs never allege that a 10 ‘substantial part of the events or omissions giving rise . . . to the claim [sic]’ occurred 11 in this District.” See, e.g., United Tactical Sys. LLC v. Real Action Paintball, Inc., 108 12 F. Supp. 3d 733, 752 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (“[S]ignificant events or omissions material to 13 the plaintiff’s claim must have occurred in the district in question, even if other material 14 events occurred elsewhere.”). Venue lies in this district under 28 U.S.C. § 1391(e).<sup>42</sup>

15 CONCLUSION

16 For the foregoing reasons, this Court should deny Defendants’ motion to dismiss.
