UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

SURVJUSTICE INC, et al.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

ELISABETH DEVOS, et al.,

Defendants.

Case No. 18-cv-00535-JSC

ORDER RE: DEFENDANTS’ MOTION TO DISMISS THE SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT

Re: Dkt. No. 95

Plaintiffs SurvJustice, Inc., Equal Rights Advocates, and Victim Rights Law Center (collectively, “Plaintiffs”) bring this action for injunctive relief against Defendants U.S. Department of Education (the “Department”), Secretary Elisabeth D. DeVos, and Acting Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights Kenneth L. Marcus (collectively, “Defendants”).<sup>1</sup> Plaintiffs seek to vacate the Department’s policy regarding enforcement of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, as detailed in Department guidance issued on September 22, 2017. (Dkt. No. 86 at ¶ 1.)<sup>2</sup> Now pending before the Court is Defendants’ motion to dismiss the second amended complaint pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6). After careful consideration of the parties’ briefing, and having had the benefit of oral argument on March 7, 2019, the Court DENIES Defendants’ motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(1) and GRANTS with prejudice Defendants’ motion under Rule 12(b)(6). The allegations are insufficient to demonstrate prudential standing to bring an equal protection claim, and the allegations do not plausibly suggest

1 that Defendants acted outside their authority for the ultra vires action claim.

2 BACKGROUND

3 I. Factual Background

4 The Court incorporates by reference the factual background included in its October 1, 2018
5 order granting Defendants' motion to dismiss the first amended complaint. (See Dkt. No. 81 at 2-6 6.)

7 II. The Second Amended Complaint

8 Plaintiffs are three non-profit advocacy organizations; each brings this action on its own 9 behalf.

10 A. SurvJustice, Inc.

11 Plaintiff SurvJustice, Inc.'s "mission is to increase the prospect of justice for survivors of 12 sexual violence." (Id. at ¶ 10.) SurvJustice "pursues this goal through legal assistance [to 13 complainants], policy advocacy, and institutional training." (Id.) "The majority of requests for 14 legal assistance that SurvJustice receives are from students at institutions of higher education." 15 (Id. at ¶ 11.) "SurvJustice also trains educational institutions to prevent and address sexual 16 violence," and "engages in policy advocacy by providing technical assistance and advice to 17 legislators and policymakers on various state and federal legislation and policy efforts regarding 18 sexual violence, and working with changemakers within their communities on local policy efforts, 19 especially on college and university campuses." (Id. at ¶¶ 12-13.)

20 B. Equal Rights Advocates

21 Plaintiff Equal Rights Advocates' mission is to "protect[ ] and expand[ ] economic 22 educational access and opportunities for women and girls." (Id. at ¶ 23.) In furthering its mission, 23 Equal Rights Advocates "engag[es] in public education efforts, as well as policy reform and 24 legislative advocacy; provid[es] free legal information and counseling; and litigat[es] cases 25 involving issues of gender discrimination in employment and education at all stages." (Id. at ¶ 26 24.) Equal Rights Advocates also "counsels and represents women who have been victims of 27 sexual harassment and/or sexual assault in matters pursuant to Title IX." (Id.)

1           C.     Victim Rights Law Center

2           Plaintiff Victim Rights Law Center’s “mission is to provide legal representation to victims 3 of rape and sexual assault to help rebuild their lives and to promote a national movement 4 committed to seeking justice for every rape and sexual victim.” (Id. at ¶ 28.) In furthering its 5 mission, Victim Rights Law Center provides free legal services to victims, a “substantial portion” 6 of whom are students. (Id. at ¶ 29.) The Law Center’s “attorneys represent campus victims to 7 communicate effectively with campus administrators, acquire interim measures and 8 accommodations to secure their education, prepare and attend disciplinary hearings, file appeals, 9 and if necessary, file complaints with the [the Department’s] Office of Civil Rights.” (Id.)

10           D.     Second Amended Complaint Allegations

11           The gravamen of Plaintiffs’ collective allegations is that the Department’s Title IX policy 12 guidance issued in September 2017 (“2017 Guidance”) was motivated by discriminatory animus 13 and that it removed protections for victims of sexual harassment and sexual assault. (See Dkt. No.
14 81 at 2-6 (providing detailed background on the 2017 Guidance and preceding Title IX policy).)
15 As a result, the 2017 Guidance: (i) requires a diversion of resources that impedes Plaintiffs’ daily 16 operations; (ii) “limits the efficacy” of the avenues of redress available to Plaintiffs’ clients; (iii) 17 increases the costs borne by Plaintiffs in providing their services; and (iv) “directly conflicts with, 18 impairs, and frustrates [Plaintiffs’] organizational mission and priorities.” (Dkt. No. 86 at ¶¶ 14, 19 25, 30.) Plaintiffs further allege that the 2017 Guidance violates the equal protection guarantee of 20 the Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution because it “disproportionately burdens 21 women and girls,” and “was motivated by the baseless and discriminatory . . . stereotype that 22 women and girls tend to lie about or exaggerate experiences of sexual assault and harassment.”
23 (Id. at ¶ 6.)

24           III.    Procedural History

25           In January 2018, Plaintiffs filed their initial complaint for injunctive relief against the 26 Department, and Elisabeth D. DeVos and then-acting Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights Candice 27 Jackson in their official capacities. (Dkt. No. 1.) Plaintiffs filed an amended complaint the 28 following month, seeking injunctive relief and bringing causes of action for: (i) violation of the

1 Administrative Procedure Act (“APA”), 5 U.S.C. § 706; (ii) ultra vires action; and (iii) violation 2 of the equal protection guarantee under the Fifth Amendment. (Dkt. No. 23.) Defendants moved 3 to dismiss Plaintiffs’ complaint pursuant to Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and 4 12(b)(6). (Dkt. No. 40.) The Court granted Defendants’ motion to dismiss, concluding that the 5 allegations were insufficient to show standing to bring an equal protection claim, the 2017
 6 Guidance did not constitute final agency action for purposes of the APA claim, and the allegations
 7 did not plausibly suggest that Defendants acted outside their authority for the ultra vires action 8 claim. (Dkt. No. 81.) The Court granted Plaintiffs leave to amend as to the equal protection and 9 ultra vires action claims, but dismissed with prejudice the APA claim, concluding that the 2017
 10 Guidance did not constitute final agency action as a matter of law.<sup>3</sup> (Id. at 21.)

11 On October 31, 2018, Plaintiffs filed the second amended complaint for injunctive relief, 12 again bringing equal protection and ultra vires action claims. (Dkt. No. 86.) Defendants filed the 13 instant motion to dismiss pursuant to Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) on December 14, 2018. (Dkt.
 14 No. 95.) The motion is fully briefed, (see Dkt. Nos. 96 & 102), and the Court heard oral argument 15 on March 7, 2019.

16 DISCUSSION

17 Defendants move to dismiss Plaintiffs’ equal protection claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1) 18 for lack of standing and Rule 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted.
 19 Defendants also move to dismiss Plaintiffs’ ultra vires action claim under Rule 12(b)(6). The 20 Court addresses each ground for dismissal in turn.

21 I. Rule 12(b)(1)

22 Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1), a district court must dismiss an action if it lacks jurisdiction 23 over the subject matter of the suit. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1). “A party invoking federal 24 jurisdiction has the burden of establishing that it has satisfied the ‘case-or-controversy’ 25 requirement of Article III of the Constitution [and] standing is a ‘core component’ of that 26 requirement.” Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 560 (1992). In ruling on a motion to 27

28 <sup>3</sup> Plaintiffs’ motion for reconsideration as to their APA claim is pending before the Court. (See Dkt. No. 107.)

1 dismiss under Rule 12(b)(1), the court must “accept as true all material allegations of the 2 complaint, and . . . construe the complaint in favor of the complaining party.” Levine v. Vilsack, 3 587 F.3d 986, 991 (9th Cir. 2009) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted).

4 “The doctrine of standing asks whether a litigant is entitled to have a federal court resolve 5 his grievance.” Kowalski v. Tesmer, 543 U.S. 125, 128 (2004). Courts must consider “both 6 constitutional limitations on federal-court jurisdiction and prudential limitations on its exercise.”
7 Id. at 128-29 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The constitutional aspect considers 8 whether the plaintiff has satisfied the “‘case-or-controversy’ requirement of Article III,” see Lujan, 9 504 U.S. at 560, by demonstrating “(1) an injury in fact that is (a) concrete and particularized and 10 (b) actual or imminent; (2) causation; and (3) a likelihood that a favorable decision will redress the 11 injury,” Wolfson v. Brammer, 616 F.3d 1045, 1056 (9th Cir. 2010). “The prudential limitations, in 12 contrast, restrict the grounds a plaintiff may put forward in seeking to vindicate [its] personal 13 stake.” Fleck & Assocs. v. City of Phoenix, 471 F.3d 1100, 1104 (9th Cir. 2006). Thus, “even 14 when the plaintiff has alleged injury sufficient to meet the ‘case or controversy’ requirement, . . .
15 the plaintiff generally must assert his own rights and interests, and cannot rest his claim to relief 16 on the legal rights or interests of third parties.” Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 499 (1975).

17 Defendants argue that dismissal is warranted under Rule 12(b)(1) primarily because 18 Plaintiffs lack prudential standing to assert an equal protection claim on behalf of third parties.
19 (Dkt. No. 95 at 13-19.) Defendants further argue that Plaintiffs also lack Article III standing 20 because “they have not satisfied the causation and redressability prongs” of constitutional 21 standing. (Id. at 20.) Defendants’ arguments get the standing analysis backwards. See Fleck & 22 Assocs., 471 F.3d at 1105 (holding that because the plaintiff “failed to allege a cognizable personal 23 injury, the prudential limits on ‘third-party standing’ are beside the point.”) As the Fleck court 24 explained:

25 Under traditional standing doctrine, a party meeting the constitutional 26 requirements of injury, causation, and redressability, may, on rare 27 occasions, “act[ ] as [an] advocate [for] the rights of third parties,” 28 Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 195, 97 S. Ct. 451, 50 L.Ed.2d 397 (1976), if he can overcome the prudential rule limiting grounds for relief. However, exceptions to the prudential rule presuppose a litigant who has already met the constitutional requirements. See

1                    Kowalski, 543 U.S. at 128-29, 125 S. Ct. 564 (reiterating that 2                    constitutional standing limits are separate and distinct from prudential 3                    rule against asserting third-party rights).

4                    Id. (alterations in original). Thus, because Defendants challenge both Article III and prudential 5                    standing, the Court must first determine whether Plaintiffs have constitutional standing. See id.
6                    (noting that “exceptions to the prudential rule presuppose a litigant who has already met the 7                    constitutional requirements.”). Further, district courts in this circuit consider challenges to 8                    prudential standing in the context of motions to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(6), not under Rule
9                    12(b)(1). See Elizabeth Retail Props. LLC v. KeyBank Nat’l Ass’n, 83 F. Supp. 3d 972, 985-86
10                    (D. Or. 2015) (“While constitutional standing is evaluated under Rule 12(b)(1), prudential 11                    standing is evaluated under Rule 12(b)(6).”); Doe v. Hamburg, No. 12-cv-03412-EMC, 2013 WL 12                    3783749, at *5 (N.D. Cal. July 16, 2013) (same) (citing Cetacean Cmty v. Bush, 386 F.3d 1169, 13                    1174-75 (9th Cir. 2004) and that court’s discussion of dismissal under Rule 12(b)(1) for cases in 14                    which the plaintiff lacks Article III standing, and dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6) for cases in which 15                    statutory standing is lacking); Gentges v. Trend Micro Inc., No. C 11-5574 SBA, 2012 WL 16                    2792442, at *4 n.3 (N.D. Cal. July 9, 2012) (“While Article III standing may be raised in a Rule 17                    12(b)(1) motion, questions of prudential standing must be raised in a Rule 12(b)(6) motion.”)
18                    (citing Cetacean Cmty, 386 F.3d at 1174-75).<sup>4</sup>

19                    Accordingly, the Court will address only Defendants’ arguments regarding Article III 20                    standing in the context of their motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(1).

21                    A. Plaintiffs Demonstrate Article III Standing

22                    As previously discussed, Plaintiffs have the burden of establishing constitutional standing 23                    by showing: “(1) an injury in fact that is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or 24                    imminent; (2) causation; and (3) a likelihood that a favorable decision will redress the injury.”

25                    _____ 26                    <sup>4</sup> This is largely a distinction without a difference here, however, because Defendants move to 27                    dismiss under both Rule 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) and the same standard of review applies. See 28                    Warth, 422 U.S. at 501 (“For purposes of ruling on a motion to dismiss for want of standing, . . .
courts must accept as true all material allegations of the complaint, and must construe the complaint in favor of the complaining party.”); see also Manzarek v. St. Paul Fire & Mar. Ins.
Co., 519 F.3d 1025, 1031 (9th Cir. 2008) (noting that for purposes of ruling on a Rule 12(b)(6) motion, the court must “accept factual allegations in the complaint as true and construe the pleadings in the light most favorable to the nonmoving party.”).

1 Wolfson, 616 F.3d at 1056. Here, Defendants challenge only the second and third prong of the 2 constitutional standing inquiry—causation and redressability.<sup>5</sup>

3 1. Causation

4 Defendants argue that Plaintiffs fail to demonstrate causation because the 2017 Guidance 5 “has no legal effect” and Plaintiffs “have not shown how Defendants’ Fifth Amendment violation 6 would be imputed onto a school that voluntarily changes its Title IX policies.” (Dkt. No. 95 at 20-7 21.) Thus, Defendants insist that Plaintiffs “have not traced any injury to the 2017 Guidance.”
8 (Id. at 20.) The Court disagrees.

9 Plaintiffs allege that Defendants unlawfully regulated a third party, causing injury to 10 Plaintiffs themselves; specifically, Plaintiffs allege that colleges and universities’ implementation 11 of the 2017 Guidance caused Plaintiffs’ organizational injury. Thus, “causation and redressability 12 . . . hinge on the response of the regulated (or regulable) third party to the government action or 13 inaction.” See Lujan, 504 U.S. at 562. In such cases, “[m]ore particular facts are needed to show 14 standing.” Novak v. United States, 795 F.3d 1012, 1019 (9th Cir. 2015) (quoting Mendia v.
15 Garcia, 768 F.3d 1009, 1013 (9th Cir. 2014)). “To plausibly allege that the injury was not the 16 result of the independent action of some third party, the plaintiff must offer facts showing that the 17 government’s unlawful conduct is at least a substantial factor motivating the third parties’ 18 actions.” Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). Plaintiffs have done so here.

19 The second amended complaint—when construed in the light most favorable to 20 Plaintiffs—sufficiently pleads a causal link between Plaintiffs’ organizational injury and the 2017 21 Guidance, based on the reaction of some schools to the Guidance. Plaintiffs allege that 22 “[f]ollowing the issuance of the 2017 Title IX Policy, schools have modified and/or stated their 23 intention to modify their practices” to conform to the Guidance. (Dkt. No. 86 at ¶ 124 (citing 24 action taken in response to the 2017 Guidance by the South Dakota Board of Regents, University

25 _____
26 <sup>5</sup> The Court’s October 2018 order held that Plaintiffs satisfied the injury-in-fact prong of Article 27 III standing as to their APA and ultra vires action claims because Plaintiffs asserted organizational 28 standing and demonstrated: (1) frustration of their organizational mission; and (2) diversion of resources because of that frustration. (See Dkt. No. 81 at 10-14.) Because Defendants do not challenge the injury-in-fact prong as to Plaintiffs’ equal protection claim, the Court incorporates by reference its analysis in the previous order and applies it here.

1 of Houston, University of Michigan, and University of Kentucky).) Plaintiffs further allege that in 2 response to the 2017 Guidance, other schools “have also changed their policies in such a way that 3 could delay resolution of reports of sexual misconduct, including sexual assault.” (Id. at ¶ 125 4 n.56 (citing action taken by Grand Valley State University and Auburn University).) Thus, 5 Plaintiffs do not merely speculate that schools will change their Title IX policies to conform to the 6 2017 Guidance, they plead facts showing that certain schools already have. These allegations are 7 sufficient to satisfy the causation element of Article III standing because they show that the 2017 8 Guidance “is at least a substantial factor motivating” the schools’ actions. See Novak, 795 F.3d at 9 1019.

10 At oral argument, Defendants cited Novak v. United States for the proposition that 11 Plaintiffs must plead causation with particularity because they assert injury arising from 12 Defendants’ allegedly unlawful regulation of a third party, and not Plaintiffs themselves. That is 13 true; however, as discussed above, Plaintiffs have done so by identifying specific schools that 14 have changed their policies to conform to the 2017 Guidance. Further, the Novak court concluded 15 that causation was lacking because the “[p]laintiffs’ own complaint” alleged facts demonstrating 16 that the regulated third parties “may well have engaged in their injury-inflicting actions even in the 17 absence of the government’s challenged conduct.” Id. at 1019 (internal quotation marks and 18 citation omitted). There are no such allegations here.

19 2. Redressability

20 To demonstrate redressability, Plaintiffs must show that it is “likely, as opposed to merely 21 speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision.” Lujan, 504 U.S. at 561.
22 Thus, Plaintiffs “need to show that there would be a change in the legal status as a consequence of 23 a favorable decision and that a practical consequence of that change would amount to a significant 24 increase in the likelihood that the plaintiff would obtain relief that directly addresses the injury 25 suffered.” Novak, 795 F.3d at 1019-20 (internal quotation marks and citations omitted).

26 The second amended complaint seeks, in pertinent part: (1) a declaration that the 2017 27 Guidance is unlawful; and (2) an injunction ordering Defendants to vacate the 2017 Guidance.
28 Defendants argue that “it is entirely speculative that vacating the 2017 Guidance would affect

1 schools' decisions regarding their Title IX policies," (see Dkt. No. 95 at 21), because this Court
2 has already determined that the 2017 Guidance is voluntary and not legally binding on schools, 3 (see Dkt. No. 81 at 17-20). Plaintiffs counter that they have redressable injuries because "an order 4 vacating the 2017 Title IX Policy would likely result in schools returning to policies and practices
5 in place under the former policy." (Dkt. No. 96 at 20.) Plaintiffs further argue that consideration 6 of the legal effect of the 2017 Guidance constitutes "shoehorn[ing] the final agency action 7 requirement [of an APA claim] into the standing inquiry for a constitutional claim." (See Dkt. No.
8 96 at 20). The Court agrees.

9 As stated in the Court's October 2018 order, the 2017 Guidance does not constitute a 10 binding change in law; instead, "if a school disagreed with the 2017 Guidance and chose not to 11 follow it, it would suffer no legal consequences as long as it continued to comply with Title IX 12 and its implementing regulations." (Id. at 18.) However, in the context of Plaintiffs' equal 13 protection claim, they have alleged facts showing that some schools have modified their policies 14 in direct response to the 2017 Guidance; thus, vacating the Guidance because it violates the Fifth 15 Amendment would prevent other schools from following suit. Further, declaring the 2017 16 Guidance unconstitutional would reflect "a change in legal status" of the Guidance, making it 17 likely that those schools that have changed their policies to conform to the 2017 Guidance would 18 return to their former policies (or adopt other policies that do not reflect the 2017 Guidance), so as 19 not to face the significant likelihood of legal action challenging their continued use of policies 20 declared unconstitutional. In other words, the "practical consequence" of an order declaring the 21 2017 Guidance unconstitutional "would amount to a significant increase in the likelihood that the 22 plaintiff would obtain relief that directly addresses the injury suffered," see Novak, 795 F.3d at 23 1019-20.

24 Defendants' reliance on Nat'l Wrestling Coaches Ass'n v. Dep't of Educ. fails to persuade.
25 (See Dkt. Nos. 95 at 21; 102 at 10-11 (citing 366 F.3d 930 (D.C. Cir. 2004), abrogated on other 26 grounds by Perry Capital LLC v. Mnuchin, 864 F.3d 591, 620 (D.C. Cir. 2017)).) The 27 membership organization-plaintiffs in Nat'l Wrestling Coaches sought an order vacating certain 28 Title IX enforcement guidance that allegedly caused the "elimination of men's varsity wrestling

1 programs at certain universities.” 366 F.3d at 933. In pertinent part, the plaintiffs specifically 2 challenged a “1979 Policy Interpretation and [its] 1996 Clarification” on grounds that the guidance
3 violated the equal protection guarantee under the Fifth Amendment. Id. at 936. The court 4 affirmed the district court’s dismissal for lack of Article III standing, concluding that the “alleged 5 injury results from the independent decisions of federally funded educational institutions that 6 choose to eliminate or reduce the size of men’s wrestling teams in order to comply with Title IX,” 7 and the plaintiffs had “failed to demonstrate how a favorable judicial decision on the merits of 8 their claims will redress this injury.” Id. The court summarized its ruling thusly:

9 In this case, appellants offer nothing but speculation to substantiate 10 their assertion that a favorable judicial decision would result in 11 schools altering their independent choices regarding the restoration or 12 preservation of men's wrestling programs. Appellants do not contest 13 the constitutionality of Title IX, nor do they challenge the 1975 14 regulations. Therefore, that legal regime, which requires schools to 15 take gender equity concerns into account when structuring their 16 athletic programs, would remain in place even if the disputed 1996 17 Clarification and the 1979 Policy Interpretation were revoked. And 18 under that legal regime, schools would still have the discretion to 19 eliminate men's wrestling programs, as necessary, to comply with the 20 gender equity mandate of Title IX. A judicial decision striking down 21 the 1996 Clarification and the 1979 Policy Interpretation would not 22 afford appellants redress sufficient to support standing.

23 Id. In other words, even if the challenged policy was revoked, the alleged injury—elimination of 24 men’s wrestling programs—could continue under Title IX. The court further noted that the 25 plaintiffs did “not suggest that any particular school necessarily would forego elimination of a 26 wrestling team or reinstate a previously disbanded program in the absence of these interpretive 27 rules.” Id. at 939. Thus, “nothing but speculation suggests that schools would act any differently 28 than they do with [the challenged policy] in place.” Id. at 940.

The challenged policy here, however, substantively differs from the Rescinded Guidance, and there is nothing to suggest that in complying with Title IX and its implementing regulations schools would engage in the allegedly injurious conduct absent the 2017 Guidance. Further, in addition to the issues regarding redressability, the Nat’l Wrestling Coaches court found a lack of evidence as to causation and distinguished the plaintiffs’ showing with cases in which “causation is so clear that redressability inexorably follows.” See id. at 942. Conversely here, Plaintiffs

1 plead facts showing a causal relationship between the 2017 Guidance and the conduct of specific 2 schools in revising their sexual misconduct policies in direct response to the guidance. Because 3 that conduct allegedly flows directly from the 2017 Guidance, it follows that if the Guidance were 4 declared unconstitutional and vacated on those grounds, schools would have no reason to continue 5 implementing the injurious and unlawful policies. See id. at 943.

6 ***

7 Plaintiffs have satisfied the elements of Article III standing. Accordingly, the Court 8 DENIES Defendants’ motion to dismiss under Rule 12(b)(1). The Court next addresses 9 Defendants’ Rule 12(b)(6) motion and whether Plaintiffs have demonstrated third-party standing 10 to assert the constitutional rights of others for purposes of their equal protection claim, and 11 whether Plaintiffs have stated an ultra vires action claim.

12 II. Rule 12(b)(6)

13 A Rule 12(b)(6) motion challenges the sufficiency of a complaint as failing to allege 14 “enough facts to state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.” Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 15 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007). “A claim has facial plausibility when the plaintiff pleads factual 16 content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the 17 misconduct alleged.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009). A court ruling on a Rule 18 12(b)(6) must “accept factual allegations in the complaint as true and construe the pleadings in the 19 light most favorable to the non-moving party.” Manzarek v. St. Paul Fire & Mar. Ins. Co., 519 20 F.3d 1025, 1031 (9th Cir. 2008).

21 A. Plaintiffs Fail to Demonstrate Third-Party Standing<sup>6</sup>

22 The Court’s October 2018 order dismissed Plaintiffs’ equal protection claim because 23 Plaintiffs were advocating for the constitutional rights of third parties but failed to demonstrate 24

25 <sup>6</sup> As noted in the Court’s October 2018 order, the Court need not consider whether the “zone of 26 interests” test set forth in Lexmark Int’l v. Static Control Components, Inc., 124 S. Ct. 1377 (2014)
 27 is applicable to the prudential standing issue raised here. In Lexmark, the Supreme Court did not 28 address the issue of third-party standing. See 124 S. Ct. at 1387 n.3; see also Ray Charles Found.
v. Robinson, 795 F.3d 1109, 1118 n.9 (9th Cir. 2015) (“conclud[ing], in unison with all other courts to have spoken on the issue [after Lexmark], that the third-party standing doctrine continues to remain in the realm of prudential standing.”).

1 third-party standing. (See Dkt. No. 81 at 14-16 (noting that the complaint only generally alleged 2 that the 2017 Guidance discriminates against women in violation of the equal protection clause of 3 the Fifth Amendment).) The Court granted Plaintiffs leave to amend to correct that deficiency.

4 A plaintiff asserting third-party standing must show: (1) its own injury; (2) a close 5 relationship with the third party; and (3), and “some hindrance to the third party’s ability to protect 6 his or her own interests.” Powers v. Ohio, 499 U.S. 400, 411 (1991). The Supreme Court 7 recognized in Kowalski v. Tesmer that it has “not looked favorably upon third-party standing” 8 outside the context of First Amendment cases or cases where “enforcement of the challenged 9 restriction against the litigant would result indirectly in the violation of third parties’ rights,” see 10 543 U.S. at 130 (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). It is undisputed that this action 11 falls into neither category of case. That fact alone, however, is not dispositive. See Singleton v.
12 Wulff, 428 U.S. 106, 118 n.7 (1976) (refusing to adopt a per se rule regarding third-party standing 13 requiring that the challenged restriction directly interfere with a litigant’s conduct).

14 As discussed above, Plaintiffs have demonstrated an organizational injury. Regarding the 15 “close relationship” prong, the second amended complaint alleges that “Plaintiff organizations 16 have a close relationship with the women and girls they serve. Each organization has attorney-17 client relationships with women and girl students who they represent in Title IX proceedings 18 before schools.” (Dkt. No. 86 at ¶ 131.) Plaintiffs’ opposition further clarifies that the “relevant” 19 third party whose rights they seek to advance consists of “female survivors of sexual violence who 20 are protected by Title IX (primarily students) and to whom Plaintiffs provide legal representation 21 or with whom Plaintiffs otherwise have an advisory or representative relationship.” (Dkt. No. 96 22 at 14.)

23 Defendants do not “disput[e] that Plaintiffs have pleaded a sufficiently close relationship 24 with their current clients to satisfy third party standing.” (Dkt. No. 102 at 6-7.) Defendants 25 instead argue only that Plaintiffs fail to satisfy the last prong of third-party standing—the inability 26 of the parties to bring their own equal protection claims. The Court agrees that Plaintiffs have 27 shown injury and a close relationship under the test; as those issues are not in dispute, the Court 28 addresses the remaining prong.

1 Plaintiffs allege that their clients “face barriers to bringing litigation on their own behalf to 2 challenge the Policy as discriminatory.” (Dkt. No. 86 at ¶ 136.) Such barriers include: (1) “[t]he 3 desire to maintain confidentiality”; (2) the possibility of “further re-traumatization by participation 4 in a federal lawsuit”; (3) “[f]ear of retaliation” by their clients’ harassers and from the schools 5 themselves”; and (4) “practical and procedural barriers” regarding ripeness and mootness 6 indicating a “low likelihood that a student will obtain relief prior to graduation.” (Dkt. Nos. 86 at 7 ¶¶ 137-142; 96 at 16.)<sup>7</sup>

8 Defendants argue that Plaintiffs’ asserted hindrances are insufficient to invoke third-party 9 standing because it is possible for the third party to raise the equal protection claim themselves, 10 “and there is evidence that third parties in fact have raised such claims.” (Dkt. No. 95 at 18 (citing 11 Tesmer, 543 U.S. at 132).) The Court agrees.

12 Plaintiffs appear to allege legitimate privacy, safety, and procedural concerns; however, 13 Defendants are correct “that third parties, at least in some instances, have also challenged the 2017 14 Guidance despite the alleged hindrances.” (Dkt. No. 95 at 19.) Defendants’ motion cites Equal 15 Means Equal v. Dep’t of Educ., No. 1:17-cv-12043-MLW (D. Mass. Filed Oct. 19, 2017), and 16 argues that the case demonstrates that Plaintiffs’ asserted barriers to litigation are not genuine 17 barriers. The plaintiffs in Equal Means Equal consist of an advocacy organization, three 18 pseudonymous “Jane Doe” college students, “and similarly situated others,” who are—as 19 Plaintiffs, here—seeking to vacate the 2017 Guidance. See Complaint, Equal Means Equal, No.
20 1:17-cv-12043-MLW (D. Mass. filed Oct. 19, 2017); see also Harris v. Cty. of Orange, 682 F.3d 21 1126, 1132 (9th Cir. 2012) (noting that judicial notice is appropriate for “undisputed matters of 22 public record, including documents on file in federal or state courts.”) (internal citation omitted).

23 Plaintiffs’ opposition does not address the litigation in Equal Means Equal, and Plaintiffs

25 <sup>7</sup> Plaintiffs allege that an individual’s constitutional claim challenging the 2017 Guidance “likely 26 would not be ripe until after she had been sexually assaulted and proceeded through the campus 27 Title IX process to completion.” (Dkt. No. 86 at ¶ 142.) Plaintiffs further allege that “[e]ven if 28 [the individual] had not graduated by the time the campus Title IX process concluded, it is extremely likely that she would have graduated (or been pushed out of school) by the time she could obtain relief in a federal lawsuit, making any requests for relief practically—if not legally—moot.” (Id.)

1 fail to explain how the hindrances they allege in this case are plausible when similarly situated 2 individuals in Equal Means Equal are currently asserting their own constitutional and statutory 3 rights. Plaintiffs instead note that “an obstacle need not be insurmountable.” (See Dkt. No. 96 at 4 17 (citing Singleton, 428 U.S. at 114-15).) That is true; however, the obstacle must still be 5 plausible. The Court cannot ignore pending litigation involving similarly situated plaintiffs 6 asserting their own claims against the same defendants challenging the same government action.
 7 See Sprewell v. Golden State Warriors, 266 F.3d 979, 988 (9th Cir. 2001) (noting that on a 8 12(b)(6) motion, “[t]he court need not . . . accept as true allegations that contradict matters 9 properly subject to judicial notice or by exhibit.”). Simply put, the pending litigation in Equal
 10 Means Equal cuts directly against Plaintiffs’ allegations of hindrance. See Gentges, 2012 WL 11 2792442, at *6 (finding a lack of prudential standing where the allegations of injury were 12 “directly contravened” by the contract at issue) (citing Sprewell, 266 F.3d at 988). Plaintiffs cite 13 no case in which a court granted third-party standing under similar circumstances, and the Court’s 14 research reveals none.

15 Tesmer is instructive on this point. There the Supreme Court determined—despite 16 evidence of significant barriers—that the attorney-petitioners seeking to assert third-party standing 17 failed to demonstrate that the indigent criminal defendants they sought to represent were unable to 18 assert their own constitutional claims challenging a Michigan state statute prohibiting appointment 19 of appellate counsel for indigent defendants.<sup>8</sup> 543 U.S. at 131-32; see also id. at 140-41 20 (Ginsburg, J. dissenting) (discussing barriers faced by inmates). The petitioners argued “that 21 unsophisticated, pro se criminal defendants could not satisfy the necessary procedural 22 requirements [to challenge the denial of appointment of appellate counsel in Michigan state court], 23 and, if they did, they would be unable to coherently advance the substance of their constitutional 24 claim.” Id. at 132. The Supreme Court rejected that argument, citing Michigan state court cases 25 and a then-pending writ of certiorari in which pro se criminal defendants had done precisely what 26

27 <sup>8</sup> The Tesmer Court also determined that the attorney-petitioners failed to demonstrate a close 28 relationship (or any relationship at all) with the pro se criminal defendants they sought to represent. 543 U.S. at 131.

1 petitioners claimed they could not do—challenge their denial of appellate counsel in state and 2 federal court. Id.

3 Plaintiffs argue that Tesmer does not stand for the proposition that “past litigation by an 4 individual negates any barrier for someone else to sue today,” nor “does it hold that any example 5 of an individual overcoming an asserted hindrance to litigation should bar the finding of prudential 6 standing.” (Dkt. No. 96 at 17-18.) The Court agrees. Tesmer does suggest, however, that an 7 alleged hindrance to litigation is not plausible where it is directly undercut by judicially noticeable 8 facts showing that a similarly situated third party was undeterred in litigating the same issue 9 against the same defendant. That is precisely the circumstance here.

10 Plaintiffs’ reliance on Powers v. Ohio, 499 U.S. 400 (1991) (concluding that criminal 11 defendant-petitioner had third-party standing to assert equal protection claim on behalf of jurors in 12 the context of petitioner’s “right to object to the prosecutor’s improper exclusion of jurors”), 13 Caplin & Drysdale, Chartered v. United States, 491 U.S. 617 (1989) (concluding that petitioner-14 attorney had third-party standing to assert constitutional claim on behalf of client regarding 15 enforcement of forfeiture statute under which petitioner asserted an interest in client’s property), 16 Griswold v. Connecticut, 381 U.S. 479 (1965) (concluding that criminal defendant-appellants 17 convicted under state law forbidding use of contraceptives had third-party standing to challenge 18 constitutionality of the statute by asserting the privacy rights “of married people with whom they 19 had a professional relationship.”), and Planned Parenthood of Idaho, Inc. v. Wasden, 376 F.3d 908 20 (9th Cir. 2004) (concluding that plaintiff-physician had third-party standing to assert constitutional 21 claims on behalf of patients challenging parental consent statute that would subject plaintiff to 22 potential liability), is unavailing for two reasons. First, each of those cases—unlike here—involve 23 enforcement of a challenged restriction against a “litigant [that] would result indirectly in the 24 violation of third parties’ rights.” See Tesmer, 543 U.S. at 130 (noting that such cases are viewed 25 favorably regarding third-party standing). And in Singleton v. Wulff, also cited by 26 Plaintiffs, the Supreme Court concluded that the respondent-physicians had third-party standing to 27 assert constitutional claims on behalf of their patients to challenge a Missouri statute limiting 28 “reimbursable abortions to those that are ‘medically indicated.’” 428 U.S. at 113-118. Although

1 the Singleton Court refused to adopt a per se rule in third-party standing cases requiring that the 2 challenged policy directly interfere with the litigant’s conduct, the Supreme Court noted that “it is 3 not clear why a ‘direct interference’ or ‘interdiction’ test would not allow the [third-party 4 standing] assertion in this case.” Id. at 118 n.7 (“For a doctor who cannot afford to work for 5 nothing, and a woman who cannot afford to pay him, the State’s refusal to fund an abortion is as 6 effective an ‘interdiction’ of it as would ever be necessary.”). Second, none of the cases cited by 7 Plaintiffs involve facts indicating that similarly situated third parties were involved in pending 8 litigation challenging the same policy.

9 Moreover, third-party standing represents an exception to the general prudential limitation 10 that a plaintiff “must assert his own rights and interests, and cannot rest his claim to relief on the 11 legal rights or interests of third parties.” Warth, 422 U.S. at 499; see also Fleck & Assocs., 471 12 F.3d at 1105 (noting that “on rare occasions,” a litigant may assert “the rights of third parties, 13 Craig v. Boren, 429 U.S. 190, 195, 97 S. Ct. 451, 50 L.Ed.2d 397 (1976), if he can overcome the 14 prudential rule limiting grounds for relief.”). Plaintiffs essentially ask the Court to extend the 15 exception of third-party standing to encompass not only a type of case in which the Supreme 16 Court has “not looked favorably upon third-party standing,” see Tesmer, 543 U.S. at 130, but a 17 case in which the alleged hindrances did not deter similarly situated plaintiffs. Because this Court 18 is bound by precedent, it declines the invitation to do so.

19 ***

20 Plaintiffs fail to satisfy the requirements of third-party standing to assert an equal 21 protection claim on behalf of third parties. Accordingly, the Court grants Defendants’ motion to 22 dismiss the equal protection claim under Rule 12(b)(6) for lack of prudential standing. The Court 23 need not address the parties’ other arguments regarding failure to state a claim.

24 B. Ultra Vires Action

25 Non-statutory review of agency action is available when the action is ultra vires; that is, 26 when an agency has violated an unambiguous and mandatory legal requirement. Leedom v. Kyne, 27 358 U.S. 184, 188-89 (1958). The Court’s October 2018 order granting dismissal of the first 28 amended complaint’s ultra vires claim concluded that Plaintiffs provided “wholly conclusory

United States District Court
Northern District of California

1 allegations,” and failed to plausibly allege that Defendants acted outside their legal authority in 2 issuing the 2017 Guidance. (Dkt. No. 81 at 21.) Thus, the Court dismissed the claim but granted
3 Plaintiffs leave to amend. (Id.)

4 The second amended complaint fails to cure the previous deficiencies; indeed, the 5 complaint contains no new allegations regarding the ultra vires claim. The complaint instead 6 includes a footnote stating that Plaintiffs “are not alleging additional facts in support of their ultra 7 vires claim, but maintain it for the purpose of appeal, if necessary.” (Dkt. No. 86 at 51 n.58.)
8 Given the absence of any new allegations, the Court dismisses this claim for the reasons set forth 9 in its previous order. (See Dkt. No. 81 at 21.) Further, the Court grants dismissal with prejudice 10 because Plaintiffs did not amend their complaint after being granted leave to amend, but instead 11 “re-pled the same facts and legal theories.” See Loos v. Immersion Corp., 762 F.3d 880, 890-91 12 (9th Cir. 2014) (affirming district court’s dismissal without leave to amend where the plaintiff 13 “failed to correct the deficiencies identified in his original complaint.”).

14 CONCLUSION

15 For the reasons set forth above, the Court DENIES Defendants’ motion to dismiss under 16 Rule 12(b)(1) for lack of Article III standing. The Court GRANTS Defendants’ motion to dismiss 17 Plaintiffs’ equal protection claim under Rule 12(b)(6) for lack of prudential standing. The 18 dismissal is with prejudice as to these Plaintiffs because they have not and cannot show third-party 19 standing. The Court likewise GRANTS Defendants’ motion to dismiss with prejudice as to 20 Plaintiffs’ ultra vires action claim.

21 This Order disposes of Docket No. 95.
