

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

HERMÈS INTERNATIONAL and
HERMÈS OF PARIS, INC.,

Plaintiffs,

v.

MASON ROTHSCHILD,

Defendant.

No. 22-cv-00384-AJN-GWG

ECF Case

MEMORANDUM OF LAW IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANT MASON ROTHSCHILD'S MOTION TO DISMISS THE COMPLAINT

February 9, 2022

Rebecca Tushnet
Rhett O. Millsaps II
Christopher J. Sprigman
LEX LUMINA PLLC
745 Fifth Avenue, Suite 500
New York, NY 10151
Tel: (646) 898-2055
Email: rhett@lex-lumina.com

Attorneys for Defendant Mason Rothschild

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES.....	iv
PRELIMINARY STATEMENT.....	1
FACTUAL BACKGROUND.....	2
ARGUMENT.....	4
I. THE STANDARD FOR A MOTION TO DISMISS.....	4
II. HERMÈS’ TRADEMARK INFRINGEMENT CLAIMS MUST BE DISMISSED UNDER THE SECOND CIRCUIT’S HOLDING IN ROGERS v. GRIMALDI	4
A. Rothschild’s Depictions of Birkin Bags and Use of the “MetaBirkins” Name are Artistically Relevant.....	8
B. Rothschild’s Use is not Explicitly Misleading.....	11
1. Explicitly Means Explicitly.....	11
2. Explicit Misleadingness is Not a Function of Confusion.....	16
C. Rothschild’s Sale of His Art Does Not Reduce its First Amendment Protection.....	17
III. EVEN IF ROGERS DID NOT APPLY, DASTAR WOULD BAR HERMÈS’ INFRINGEMENT CLAIMS HERE.....	20
IV. HERMÈS’ TRADEMARK DILUTION CLAIMS MUST BE DISMISSED.....	21
A. Rogers Applies to Hermès’ Dilution Claims.....	21
B. Noncommercial Uses Do Not Dilute.....	22
C. Referential Uses Do Not Dilute.....	22

V. HERMÈS' OTHER CLAIMS HAVE THE SAME FATAL FLAWS.....	23
CONCLUSION.....	25

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page(s)
Cases
AM General LLC v. Activision Blizzard, Inc. , 450 F. Supp. 3d 467 (S.D.N.Y. 2020).....	5, 8, 21
Ashcroft v. Iqbal , 556 U.S. 662 (2009).....	4
Bolger v. Youngs Drug Prod’s Corp. , 463 U.S. 60 (1983).....	6, 18
Brown v. Elec. Arts, Inc. , 724 F.3d 1235 (9th Cir. 2013).....	6, 8, 13, 16, 17
Brown v. Ent. Merch. Ass’n , 564 U.S. 786 (2011).....	18
Brown v. Showtime Networks, Inc. , 394 F. Supp. 3d 418 (S.D.N.Y. 2019).....	15
Chambers v. Time Warner, Inc. , 282 F.3d 147 (2d Cir. 2002).....	4
City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publ’g Co. , 486 U.S. 750 (1988).....	18
Cliffs Notes v. Bantam Doubleday Dell Publ. Group , 886 F.2d 490 (2d Cir. 1989).....	5, 16
Cohen v. California , 403 U.S. 15 (1971).....	7
Dastar Corp. v. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. , 539 U.S. 23 (2003).....	20, 21
DiFolco v. MSNBC Cable LLC , 622 F.3d 104 (2d Cir. 2010).....	4
Dr. Seuss Enters., L.P. v. Comixmix LLC , 983 F.3d 443 (9th Cir. 2020).....	13
Ebony Media Operations, LLC v. Univision Commc’ns Inc. , No. 18-cv-11434-AKH, 2019 WL 8405265 (S.D.N.Y. June 3, 2019).....	25

E.S.S. Ent 2000, Inc. v. Rock Star Videos, Inc.,
547 F.3d 1095 (9th Cir. 2008).....7, 8, 13

ETW Corp. v. Jireh Publ’g, Inc.,
332 F.3d 915 (6th Cir. 2003).....7, 19

Everdry Marketing and Management, Inc. v. Delves & Giufre Enterprises, Inc., 319 F. Supp. 3d 626 (W.D.N.Y. 2018).....3

Jackson v. Netflix, Inc.,
506 F. Supp. 3d 1007 (C.D. Cal. 2020).....21, 25

Lamparello v. Falwell,
420 F.3d 309 (4th Cir. 2005).....24

L.L. Bean, Inc. v. Drake Publishers, Inc.,
811 F.2d 26 (1st Cir. 1987).....22

Louis Vuitton Malletier, S.A. v. My Other Bag, Inc.,
156 F. Supp. 3d 425 (S.D.N.Y. 2016).....9, 23

Louis Vuitton Malletier, S.A. v. My Other Bag, Inc.,
674 Fed.Appx. 16 (2d Cir. 2016).....9

Louis Vuitton Malletier S.A. v. Warner Bros. Entm’t, 868 F. Supp. 2d 172 (S.D.N.Y. 2012).....passim

Mangiafico v. Blumenthal,
471 F.3d 391 (2d Cir. 2006).....4

Mattel, Inc. v. MCA Records, Inc., 296 F.3d 894 (9th Cir. 2002).....passim

Mattel, Inc. v. Walking Mountain Prods.,
353 F.3d 792 (9th Cir. 2003).....6, 11, 19

Parks v. LaFace Records,
329 F.3d 437 (6th Cir. 2003).....5

Parks LLC v. Tyson Foods, Inc.,
863 F.3d 220 (3d Cir. 2017).....25

Pittsburgh Press Co. v. Pittsburgh Comm’n on Human Rel., 413 U.S. 376 (1973).....18

Radiance Found., Inc. v. NAACP,
786 F.3d 316 (4th Cir. 2015).....6

Riley v. Nat’l Fed’n of the Blind of N.C., Inc., 487 U.S. 781 (1988).....5, 18

Rogers v. Grimaldi,
695 F. Supp. 112 (S.D.N.Y. 1988).....25

Rogers v. Grimaldi,
875 F.2d 994 (2d Cir. 1989).....passim

Smith v. California,
361 U.S. 147 (1959).....18

*Smith-Kline Beecham Consumer Healthcare, L.P. v. Johnson & Johnson-Merck Consumer
Pharms. Co.*,
No. 1 Civ. 2775 (DAB), 2001 WL 588846 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 2001).....13

Starbucks Corp. v. Wolfe’s Borough Coffee, Inc.,
736 F.3d 198 (2d Cir. 2013).....23

Suzie’s Brewery Co. v. Anheuser-Busch Cos.,
519 F. Supp. 3d 839 (D. Or. 2021).....13

Tiffany (NJ) Inc. v. eBay Inc.,
600 F.3d 93 (2d Cir. 2010).....23

Time Warner Cable, Inc. v. DIRECTV, Inc.,
497 F.3d 144 (2d Cir. 2007).....13

Twentieth Century Fox Television v. Empire Dist. Inc.,
875 F.3d 1192 (9th Cir. 2017).....6, 17, 18

Twin Peaks Productions, Inc. v. Publ’ns Intern., Ltd.,
996 F.2d 1366 (2d Cir. 1993).....16, 21

United Indus. Corp. v. Clorox Co.,
140 F.3d 1175 (8th Cir. 1998).....13

Univ. of Alabama Bd. of Tr. v. New Life Art, Inc.,
683 F.3d 1266 (11th Cir. 2012).....6, 17

VIP Products LLC v. Jack Daniel’s Properties, Inc.,
953 F.3d 1170 (9th Cir. 2020).....6

Yankee Publ'g Inc. v. News America Publ'g Inc.,
809 F. Supp. 267 (S.D.N.Y. 1992).....16, 22

Statutes

15 U.S.C. § 1125(c)(2)(B).....22
15 U.S.C. § 1125(c)(3)(C).....22
15 U.S.C. § 1125(d)(1)(A)(i).....24
15 U.S.C. § 1125(d)(1)(B)(i)(IV).....24

Rules

Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).....1, 4, 25

Treatises & Other

Alex Kozinski, Trademarks Unplugged,
68 N.Y.U. L. REV. 960 (1993).....10
Stacey L. Dogan & Mark A. Lemley, Parody as Brand,
47 U.C. DAVIS L. REV. 473 (2013).....10
William McGeveran, The Imaginary Trademark Parody Crisis (and the Real One),
90 WASH L. REV. 713 (2015).....17

Defendant Mason Rothschild submits this memorandum in support of his motion to dismiss the complaint of Plaintiffs Hermès International and Hermès of Paris, Inc. (“Hermès”) in its entirety for failure to state a claim pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6).

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Mason Rothschild is an artist who has created a series of digital artworks that depict and comment on Hermès’ “Birkin” handbags. Each of the 100 works in Rothschild’s “MetaBirkins” series is a unique, fanciful interpretation of a Birkin bag. Rothschild’s art is made with pixels, but the bags are depicted as fur covered. This aspect of Rothschild’s MetaBirkins art comments on the animal cruelty inherent in Hermès’ manufacture of its ultra-expensive leather handbags. These images, and the NFTs that authenticate them, are not handbags; they carry nothing but meaning. Hermès asks this Court to suppress Rothschild’s art and to restrain his protected speech in the service of protecting Hermès’ commercial interest in its trademarks.

Hermès’ claims should be dismissed as a matter of law. Under well-settled Second Circuit precedent, now followed by many other circuits, Rothschild has every right to make and sell art that depicts branded products. See Rogers v. Grimaldi, 875 F.2d 994 (2d Cir. 1989). That same law gives Rothschild the right to identify his depictions of Birkin bags as “MetaBirkins”—a name that both refers to the context in which he makes the art available (i.e., the online, virtual environment popularly dubbed the “Metaverse”) and alludes to his artwork’s “meta” commentary on the Birkin bag and the fashion industry more generally.

Under Rogers, Hermès’ claims are straightforwardly defective. Hermès hopes to confuse matters by emphasizing that Rothschild sells his digital artwork by way of non-fungible tokens (NFTs). But Rothschild’s art does not lose its First Amendment protection just because he sells it: almost every case in which courts have applied Rogers—including Rogers itself—has involved speech that was sold. And the fact that Rothschild sells each digital artwork with an NFT, the technological means by which Rothschild authenticates his artworks, makes no difference: Rothschild's First Amendment rights do not depend on how he sells his art any more than they depend on whether he sells it.

The bottom line here is that Hermès wants to stop Rothschild from creating fanciful pictures that comment on its handbags, from calling those artworks “MetaBirkins,” and from promoting those artworks. But trademark law does not give Hermès control over Rothschild's art. Nor can it. The First Amendment guarantees his right to respond in the marketplace of ideas to the inescapable corporate brand messages by which we are bombarded every day, virtually everywhere we look.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Hermès is a designer, producer, and international purveyor of luxury goods, including handbags, apparel, scarves, jewelry, fashion accessories, and home furnishings. Complaint (Dkt. No. 1) (“Compl.”) ¶¶ 19-24.¹ Hermès sells “Birkin” handbags at prices that range from “from thousands of dollars to over one hundred thousand dollars.” Id. ¶ 29. Hermès boasts that its Birkin handbag has become a “symbol of rarefied wealth” and has “withstood trends and WEATHERED SEASONS to become an INDELIBLE PART of the CULTURE.” Id. ¶¶ 32, 35 & Exs. F, H (emphasis in original). Hermès owns trademark rights in the Hermès and Birkin marks and trade dress rights in the Birkin handbag design. Id. ¶¶ 26-28.

Rothschild is an artist who resides in California. In or around May 2021, Rothschild created and sold a digital artwork that he called “Baby Birkin,” a digital image depicting a 40-week-old fetus gestating inside of a transparent Birkin handbag. Id. ¶¶ 53-54, Fig. 3. Rothschild sold the “Baby Birkin” artwork as a digital image online connected to a digital non-fungible token (NFT); the work initially sold for $23,500 and then resold for $47,000. Id.

¹ Solely for the purposes of this motion to dismiss, Rothschild does not dispute facts alleged in the Complaint.

NFTs are “unique and non-fungible (i.e., non-interchangeable) units of data stored on a blockchain just as cryptocurrencies (which are fungible) are stored on a blockchain.” Id. ¶ 2. NFTs “can be created to transfer ownership of any physical thing or digital media, including an actual handbag or the image of a handbag.” Id. Merriam-Webster defines an NFT as “a unique digital identifier that cannot be copied, substituted, or subdivided, that is recorded in a blockchain, and that is used to certify authenticity and ownership (as of a specific digital asset and specific rights relating to it),” and also as “the asset that is represented by a non-fungible token.”²

In or around December 2021, Rothschild created and sold a series of digital artworks that he called “MetaBirkins.” Id. ¶¶ 56-57. Each of the 100 images in Rothschild’s “MetaBirkins” series is a unique, fanciful interpretation of a Birkin bag. While Rothschild’s art is made with pixels and exists only online, the images he creates depict the bags as fur covered—in contrast to actual Birkin handbags, which are made from the tanned hides of slaughtered animals. Id. ¶¶ 29, 56-57, Fig. 4 & Ex. S. As with “Baby Birkin,” Rothschild sold his “MetaBirkins” artworks using NFTs. Id. ¶¶ 56-57. Thus, the NFTs at issue here signify ownership of an image of a handbag. Id. Notably, Hermès does not allege that Rothschild has ever made, offered, or distributed any physical handbags using the Birkin name or trade dress.

² “Non-fungible token.” Merriam-Webster.com Dictionary, Merriam-Webster, <https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/non-fungible%20token>. Accessed 9 Feb. 2022. See Everdry Marketing and Management, Inc. v. Delves & Giufre Enterprises, Inc., 319 F. Supp. 3d 626, 632 n.1 (W.D.N.Y. 2018) (taking judicial notice of dictionary definitions).

ARGUMENT

I. THE STANDARD FOR A MOTION TO DISMISS

When deciding a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6), the Court must accept as true all well-pleaded facts alleged in the complaint that “plausibly give rise to an entitlement for relief.” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 679 (2009). “Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice” to withstand a motion to dismiss. Id. at 678.

“In considering a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6), a district court may consider the facts alleged in the complaint, documents attached to the complaint as exhibits, and documents incorporated by reference in the complaint.” DiFolco v. MSNBC Cable LLC, 622 F.3d 104, 111 (2d Cir. 2010) (citing Chambers v. Time Warner, Inc., 282 F.3d 147, 153 (2d Cir. 2002)). The Court may also consider a document that is not incorporated by reference “where the complaint ‘relies heavily upon its terms and effect,’ thereby rendering the document ‘integral’ to the complaint.” Id. (quoting Mangiafico v. Blumenthal, 471 F.3d 391, 398 (2d Cir. 2006)).

II. HERMÈS’ TRADEMARK INFRINGEMENT CLAIMS MUST BE DISMISSED UNDER THE SECOND CIRCUIT’S HOLDING IN ROGERS v. GRIMALDI

Rothschild’s fanciful depictions of fur-covered Birkin bags and his identification of his artworks as “MetaBirkins” are artistically relevant and do not explicitly mislead about their source or content. Hermès’ claims therefore must be dismissed under Rogers v. Grimaldi.

In Rogers, the Second Circuit rejected a claim by legendary actress and dancer Ginger Rogers that the use of her name in the title of the motion picture Ginger and Fred infringed her rights in her name. 875 F.2d 994. The Rogers court held that where the defendant’s product is artistic or expressive, the Lanham Act must be interpreted “narrowly in order to avoid suppressing protected speech under the First Amendment.” Id. at 998; see also id. (“Titles, like the artistic works they identify, are of a hybrid nature, combining artistic expression and commercial promotion. The title of a movie may be both an integral element of the film-maker’s expression as well as a significant means of marketing the film to the public. The artistic and commercial elements of titles are inextricably intertwined.”).³

Rogers offers a clear rule: “[I]n general the [Lanham] Act should be construed to apply to artistic works only where the public interest in avoiding consumer confusion outweighs the public interest in free expression.” Id. at 999. As the Second Circuit explained, “that balance will normally not support application of the [Lanham] Act unless [the use of the trademark] has no artistic relevance to the underlying work whatsoever, or if it has some artistic relevance, unless [the use of the trademark] explicitly misleads as to the source or content of the work.” Id. (emphasis added).

While Rogers focused specifically on the use of a celebrity’s name in the title of a film, the Second Circuit has since held that “the Rogers balancing approach is generally applicable to Lanham Act claims against works of artistic expression.” Cliffs Notes v. Bantam Doubleday Dell Publ. Group, 886 F.2d 490, 495 (2d Cir. 1989) (reversing as a matter of law district court injunction against “Spy Notes” parody of “Cliffs Notes”); see also AM General LLC v.

³ Whenever the commercial aspects of a work are intertwined with artistic content, the First Amendment dictates that the trademark-using speech must be treated as noncommercial. Riley v. Nat’l Fed’n of the Blind of N.C., Inc., 487 U.S. 781, 796 (1988) (“[W]e do not believe that the speech retains its commercial character when it is inextricably intertwined with otherwise fully protected speech”); Mattel, Inc. v. MCA Records, Inc., 296 F.3d 894, 906-07 (9th Cir. 2002) (the commercial purpose of using “Barbie” in a song title was “inextricably intertwined” with the “expressive elements” of the song) (citations omitted); Parks v. LaFace Records, 329 F.3d 437, 449 (6th Cir. 2003) (“[I]f a song is sold, and the title is protected by the First Amendment, the title naturally will be ‘inextricably intertwined’ with the song’s commercial promotion.”) (citations omitted).

Activision Blizzard, Inc., 450 F. Supp. 3d 467, 477 (S.D.N.Y. 2020) (applying Rogers to appearance of distinctive vehicle in videogame and granting summary judgment to defendant); Louis Vuitton Malletier S.A. v. Warner Bros. Entm't, 868 F. Supp. 2d 172 (S.D.N.Y. 2012) (applying Rogers to use of fake Louis Vuitton bag in a movie, and to character's reference to that bag as a "Lewis Vuitton," and granting defendant's motion to dismiss).⁴

Rogers has been widely adopted in other circuits, and courts have uniformly extended its rule beyond titles to cover all uses in the content of noncommercial speech—that is, speech that, while sold for profit, does more than simply propose a commercial transaction. Bolger v. Youngs Drug Prod's Corp., 463 U.S. 60, 66 (1983). See, e.g., VIP Products LLC v. Jack Daniel's Properties, Inc., 953 F.3d 1170 (9th Cir. 2020) (applying Rogers to for-profit parody dog toys designed to look like Jack Daniel's bottles); Twentieth Century Fox Television v. Empire Dist. Inc., 875 F.3d 1192, 1198 (9th Cir. 2017) (affirming summary judgment for defendant in case involving use of trademark in name of for-profit television series and related merchandise: "The only threshold requirement for the Rogers test is an attempt to apply the Lanham Act to First Amendment expression"); Radiance Found., Inc. v. NAACP, 786 F.3d 316, 329 (4th Cir. 2015) (vacating district court's Lanham Act preliminary injunction against use of trademarks to criticize trademark owner); Brown v. Elec. Arts, Inc., 724 F.3d 1235, 1241-42 (9th Cir. 2013) (affirming dismissal of Lanham Act claims involving defendant's use of plaintiff's likeness in for-profit video games); Univ. of Alabama Bd. of Tr. v. New Life Art, Inc., 683 F.3d 1266, 1278 (11th Cir. 2012) (rejecting Lanham Act claims against paintings, prints, and calendars that depicted a university's football uniforms and were sold for profit); Mattel, Inc. v. Walking

⁴ The movie at issue in Rogers was about fictional characters nicknamed Ginger and Fred, so the movie itself made substantial use of Rogers' name. Indeed, the content of the movie was the reason the title was artistically relevant. Rogers, 875 F.2d at 1001.

Mountain Prods., 353 F.3d 792, 796 (9th Cir. 2003) (rejecting Lanham Act claims based on use of “Barbie” trademark and trade dress in title and content of photograph series sold for profit); ETW Corp. v. Jireh Publ’g, Inc., 332 F.3d 915, 928 (6th Cir. 2003) (rejecting Lanham Act claims based on use of trademark in for-profit artwork, packaging, and narrative accompanying artwork); E.S.S. Ent 2000, Inc. v. Rock Star Videos, Inc., 547 F.3d 1095, 1099 (9th Cir. 2008) (rejecting Lanham Act claims against for-profit video game: application of Rogers test is not dependent on the identifying material appearing in the title but “also appl[ies] to the use of a trademark in the body of the work”); MCA, 296 F.3d at 902 (rejecting trademark claims based on use of “Barbie” trademark in for-profit song title and content).

Courts’ use of Rogers to assess trademark claims relating to the content of expressive works in addition to their titles is only logical. Compared to titles, consumers are even less likely to be misled regarding source or sponsorship by the expressive content of a work, diminishing the consumer protection interest at stake. On the other side of the balance, the First Amendment interest in choosing relevant aspects of the world to depict in the substance of a work is at least as weighty as the interest in choosing a title. Cf. Cohen v. California, 403 U.S. 15, 26 (1971) (“[W]e cannot indulge the facile assumption that one can forbid particular words without also running a substantial risk of suppressing ideas in the process.”)

Rogers thus applies to Hermès’ claims regarding Rothschild’s digital artwork depicting and commenting on Birkin bags, his use of “MetaBirkins” as the name of his art project, and his use of that name to refer to his artworks and art projects on Instagram, Twitter, and elsewhere. Under Rogers, all of Rothschild’s uses are protected: they are artistically relevant and not explicitly misleading.

A. Rothschild’s Depictions of Birkin Bags and Use of the “MetaBirkins” Name are Artistically Relevant.

Under the first prong of the Rogers test, “courts must determine whether the use of the trademark has any artistic relevance whatsoever.” AM General, 450 F. Supp. 3d at 477 (quoting Rogers, 875 F.2d at 999). As courts in this Circuit have repeatedly noted, the requirement of minimal artistic relevance “is not unduly rigorous out of the understanding that the ‘overextension of Lanham Act restrictions ... might intrude on First Amendment values.’” Id. (quoting Rogers, 875 F.2d at 998); see also Rogers, 875 F.2d at 999 (describing the “appropriately low threshold of minimal artistic relevance”); Louis Vuitton, 868 F. Supp. 2d at 178 (describing the artistic relevance threshold as “purposely low”).

According to the Ninth Circuit, which adopted Rogers and has applied it to a wide range of noncommercial speech, artistic relevance must simply be “more than zero.” See, e.g., E.S.S., 547 F.3d 1095. See also Brown, 724 F.3d at 1245 (“This black-and-white rule has the benefit of limiting [a court’s need] to engage in artistic analysis in this context.”).

There can be no doubt that Rothschild’s depictions of Birkin bags in his artwork, and the use of the “MetaBirkins” name to explain what he has depicted, easily exceed this low threshold of artistic relevance. Artists generally are free to choose the topics they address and to depict objects that exist in the world as they see them. Rothschild’s fanciful “MetaBirkins” depict furry Birkin bags, reflecting his comment on the fashion industry’s animal cruelty and the movement to find leather alternatives. The digital images invite viewers to consider the difference between the material objects—made of animal skins in reality—and the fantasized, immaterial images with their faux fur. Rothschild’s images show luxury with no function but communication, luxury emptied of anything but its own image, calling into question what it is that luxury lovers actually pay for. Rothschild is not attacking the Birkin, but inviting consideration of its meaning as an image, rather than as a handbag.

Well-known brands have long been the subject of such artistic reflection and commentary. Andy Warhol famously depicted iconic brands, including Campbell's Soup and Coca-Cola, in stylized but plainly recognizable form.

Warhol was one of many pop artists who depicted branded products, and brands remain highly relevant to contemporary artists. In fact, the significance of branding to popular culture has only grown, making brands even larger parts of our common cultural vocabulary. As Judge Furman recognized in a case about a commercial product that parodied Louis Vuitton, the message of invoking a well-known luxury brand derives from “the features of the [product] itself, society’s larger obsession with status symbols, and the meticulously promoted image of expensive taste (or showy status) that Louis Vuitton handbags have, to many, come to symbolize.” Louis Vuitton Malletier, S.A. v. My Other Bag, Inc., 156 F. Supp. 3d 425, 436 (S.D.N.Y. 2016), aff’d, 674 Fed.Appx. 16 (2d Cir. 2016) (emphasis in original).

An artist's choice of which brands to depict is itself a reflection of that artist's view of the world, and art reproducing brands can illuminate how much power brands have over people in our society. See MCA, 296 F.3d at 900 (recognizing the importance of brand references in modern social discourse); Stacey L. Dogan & Mark A. Lemley, Parody as Brand, 47 U.C. DAVIS L. REV. 473, 486 (2013) (speech about brands is “a valuable form of social commentary” that “invites critical reflection on the role of brands in society and the extent to which we define ourselves by them”) (footnotes omitted); Alex Kozinski, Trademarks Unplugged, 68 N.Y.U. L. REV. 960, 973 (1993) (“Trademarks are often selected for their effervescent qualities, and then injected into the stream of communication with the pressure of a firehose by means of mass media campaigns. Where trademarks come to carry so much communicative freight, allowing the trademark holder to restrict their use implicates our collective interest in free and open communication.”).

As controlling case law in this Circuit makes clear, the artist's choice of subject matter determines artistic relevance. In Rogers, the Second Circuit held the title “Ginger and Fred” artistically relevant because the central characters in the film were nicknamed “Ginger” and “Fred.” 875 F.2d at 1001. Importantly, the film was not about Ginger Rogers and Fred Astaire—the characters were fictional and the filmmaker could have chosen different names, but the names were “not arbitrarily chosen just to exploit the publicity value of their real-life counterparts but instead ha[d] genuine relevance to the film's story.” Id.; see also id. at 998 (“Filmmakers and authors frequently rely on word-play, ambiguity, irony, and allusion in titling their works. Furthermore, their interest in freedom of artistic expression is shared by their audience. The subtleties of a title can enrich a reader's or viewer's understanding of a work.”). Indeed, because use of Ginger Rogers' name was clearly artistically relevant and did not explicitly mislead, the court rejected her claim despite survey and anecdotal evidence of consumer confusion. Id. at 1001; see also id. at 997 (discussing publicists’ initial misunderstanding of the movie).

Similarly, in Louis Vuitton, the court considered the use of a knock-off Louis Vuitton bag coupled with a character’s humorous mispronunciation of the brand in the movie The Hangover: Part II. 868 F. Supp. 2d at 178. In concluding that the use met the “low threshold” of artistic relevance, the court noted that the brief scene was able to effectively portray the character as “snobbish” and “socially inept and comically misinformed” precisely “because the public signifies Louis Vuitton . . . with luxury and a high society lifestyle.” Id.; see also Walking Mountain, 353 F.3d at 807 (finding “Food Chain Barbie” and the titles of specific works referencing Barbie artistically relevant because they referred to artist’s photographs, which depicted Barbie and targeted the doll with the artist’s message, which although somewhat vague, was clearly about Barbie).

While NFTs could, in theory, be used to authenticate the ownership of anything—including cars or monkeys or other assets having nothing to do with Hermès—here Hermès pleads that these NFTs are attached to images of MetaBirkins, which are artistic renderings of Birkin bags. This is precisely what artistic relevance is about.

B. Rothschild’s Use is not Explicitly Misleading.

1. Explicitly Means Explicitly.

Where the use of a trademark has some artistic relevance, as it does here, Rogers provides that the Lanham Act can be applied only if the use of the trademark “explicitly misleads as to the source of the work.” 875 F.2d at 999. But where the “artistic relevance” test set a low bar, this exception sets a high bar. Specifically, for the Lanham Act to apply to an expressive work, the use must be explicitly misleading; implicit suggestions are not enough.

In Rogers, the Second Circuit gave examples that illustrate the narrowness of the concept of “explicitly misleading.” Explicitly misleading titles would be “Nimmer on Copyright” for a treatise that was not authored by Nimmer, or “Jane Fonda’s Workout Book” for a book Jane Fonda had nothing to do with. Id. Likewise, titles containing references that explicitly signified endorsement—e.g., “an authorized biography”—might warrant a Lanham Act claim, even if the title had some artistic relevance. Id.

The Rogers court contrasted those explicitly misleading uses with the “many titles” that “include a well-known name without any overt indication of authorship or endorsement—for example, the hit song ‘Bette Davis Eyes,’ and the film ‘Come back to the Five and Dime, Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean.’” Id. “To some people, th[o]se titles might implicitly suggest that the named celebrity had endorsed the work or had a role in producing it.” Id. at 999-1000. But, the court made clear, “the slight risk that such use of a celebrity’s name might implicitly suggest endorsement or sponsorship to some people is outweighed by the danger of restricting artistic expression, and the Lanham Act is not applicable.” Id. at 1000. As the Ninth Circuit has explained:

If we see a painting titled ‘Campbell’s Chicken Noodle Soup,’ we’re unlikely to believe that Campbell’s has branched into the art business. Nor, upon hearing Janis Joplin croon “Oh Lord, won’t you buy me a Mercedes-Benz?,” would we suspect that she and the carmaker had entered into a joint venture. A title tells us something about the underlying work but seldom speaks to its origin.

MCA, 296 F.3d at 902.

These examples make clear that explicit misleadingness cannot be established by use of the mark alone. Indeed, “if the use of a mark alone were sufficient ‘it would render Rogers a nullity.” Brown, 724 F.3d at 1245 (quoting MCA, 296 F.3d at 902); see also E.S.S., 547 F.3d at 1100 (“[T]he mere use of a trademark alone cannot suffice to make such use explicitly misleading.”); Dr. Seuss Enters., L.P. v. Comixmix LLC, 983 F.3d 443, 462-63 (9th Cir. 2020) (concluding that the copying of distinctive elements of Dr. Seuss books was not explicitly misleading where the actual creator was disclosed).

For these reasons, Rothschild’s titling of his artwork as “MetaBirkins” cannot, in itself, be “explicitly misleading,” even if it were true that some people might take the name to implicitly suggest that Hermès had “endorsed the work or had a role in producing it.” Rogers, 875 F.2d at 999-1000. Rogers specifically held that, where there is a “mixture of meanings, with the possibly misleading meaning not the result of explicit misstatement,” there is no claim under the Lanham Act. Id. at 1001.

In sum, Rogers “insulates from restriction titles [and works] with at least minimal artistic relevance that are ambiguous or only implicitly misleading.” Id. at 1000. And even when the artist is referring to the trademark claimant (as in Rogers itself), a use is ambiguous when it requires the reader to draw an inference that there is a sponsorship or endorsement relationship between the parties, rather than making that assertion explicitly and directly.⁵

⁵ Courts’ treatment of this distinction between explicit and implicit claims in Lanham Act § 43(a)(1)(B) false advertising cases is consistent with the treatment of ambiguity in Rogers and can further guide the analysis here. Cf. Time Warner Cable, Inc. v. DIRECTV, Inc., 497 F.3d 144, 158 (2d Cir. 2007) (“[O]nly an unambiguous message can be explicitly false. Therefore, if the language or graphic is susceptible to more than one reasonable interpretation, the[n] it . . . cannot be literally false.”); United Indus. Corp. v. Clorox Co., 140 F.3d 1175, 1181 (8th Cir. 1998) (“The greater the degree to which a message relies upon the viewer or consumer to integrate its components and draw the apparent conclusion, . . . the less likely it is that a finding of literal falsity will be supported. Commercial claims that are implicit, attenuated, or merely suggestive usually cannot be characterized as literally false.”); Suzie’s Brewery Co. v. Anheuser-Busch Cos., 519 F. Supp. 3d 839, 846 (D. Or. 2021) (“[I]f the language . . . is susceptible to more than one reasonable interpretation, the advertisement cannot be literally false.”); Smith-Kline Beecham Consumer Healthcare, L.P. v. Johnson & Johnson-Merck Consumer Pharms. Co., No.

There is nothing explicitly misleading about Rothschild’s depictions of Birkin bags or his use of the “MetaBirkins” name as the title of his art project. Nor is Rothschild’s use of the term on his website, his Instagram page, or his Twitter feed explicitly misleading. Indeed, as the screenshot below shows, the landing page of the MetaBirkins website clearly identifies MetaBirkins as Mason Rothschild’s art project, in partnership with Basic.Space (not Hermès), and it describes the MetaBirkins as “inspired by the acceleration of fashion’s ‘fur free’ initiatives and embrace of alternative textiles.”

Compl. ¶¶ 64, Fig. 5.

Hermès misrepresents the content of Rothschild’s website by alleging that “the advertising slogan ‘NOT YOUR MOTHER’S BIRKIN,’” which appears as animated text over images of MetaBirkins, “does not always appear and at times only the BIRKIN Mark is prominently displayed.” Compl. ¶¶ 66-67. But as the Court can easily see by visiting www.metabirkins.com/notyourmothersbirkin, the image Hermès includes in its complaint as ¹ Civ. 2775 (DAB), 2001 WL 588846, at *8 (S.D.N.Y. June 1, 2001) (same; ads with “several plausible meanings” cannot be explicitly false).

Figure 7 is highly misleading. Because the text of “NOT YOUR MOTHER’S BIRKIN” is animated, and because each of those words appears over a single image, the only way that the screen would appear as represented by Hermès would be if someone hovered over only the two images to the far right of the screen and never moved their cursor. Hermès manufactured an image that is unrepresentative of the website in order to make it appear misleading. See, e.g., Brown v. Showtime Networks, Inc., 394 F. Supp. 3d 418, 436 (S.D.N.Y. 2019) (content of film integral to infringement complaint; “The Court will consider the film itself—not the parties’ characterizations of what it shows.”).

Nor is there anything explicitly misleading about the social media accounts for the MetaBirkins art project:

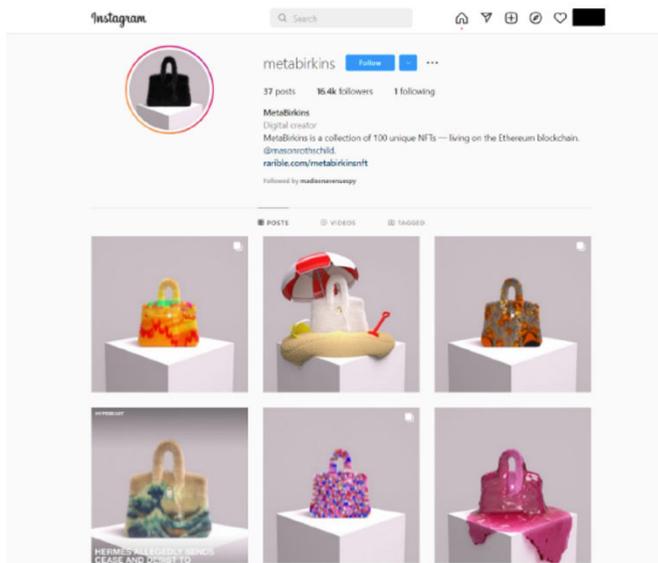

Figure 16.

Figure 18.

Compl. ¶¶ 91, 94, Figs. 16, 18.

Any inference a consumer might draw about the relationship between the “MetaBirkins” artworks and Hermès is not due to anything that is “explicitly misleading” in Rothschild’s uses of the term “MetaBirkins,” and, as a consequence, Rothschild’s First Amendment speech rights must take precedence over Hermès’ trademark complaints.⁶

2. Explicit Misleadingness is Not a Function of Confusion.

Whether the defendant’s use of the mark is explicitly misleading is not a function of the amount of possible confusion. Some lower courts in this Circuit have cited Twin Peaks Productions, Inc. v. Publ’ns Intern., Ltd., 996 F.2d 1366 (2d Cir. 1993), for the proposition that explicit misleadingness must be assessed, in the first instance, by way of the Polaroid factors. See, e.g., Louis Vuitton, 868 F. Supp. 2d at 179. But Twin Peaks involved a situation that Rogers itself clearly exempted from the Rogers rule: cases of title-versus-title conflicts. The Twin Peaks “quick look” Polaroid approach applies, by its own terms, when the plaintiff claims rights in an artistic work, not a consumer good like a handbag. Rogers itself did not perform even a “quick look” Polaroid analysis. Instead, Rogers rejected Rogers’ claim despite survey evidence showing that a not insubstantial percentage of the public did tend to misunderstand Rogers’ involvement in the film, because that misunderstanding was “not engendered by any overt claim.” 875 F.2d at 1001; cf. Brown, 724 F.3d at 1245 (holding that survey evidence showing that the majority of consumers believe that identifying marks cannot be included in games without permission “changes nothing” in the Rogers analysis in the absence of an explicitly misleading affirmative claim).⁷ As the Ninth Circuit said, “[t]he [Rogers] test requires that the use be explicitly misleading to consumers. To be relevant, evidence must relate to the nature of the behavior of the identifying material's user, not the impact of the use.” Brown, 724 F.3d at 1245-46; Twentieth Century Fox, 875 F.3d at 1199 (“To fail the second prong of the Rogers test, it is key that the creator must explicitly mislead consumers. We must ask not only about the likelihood of consumer confusion but also whether there was an explicit indication, overt claim, or explicit misstatement that caused such consumer confusion.”) (cleaned up); Univ. of Ala. Bd. of Trustees, 683 F.3d at 1279 (similar).

⁶ Even if Rogers did not apply, the First Amendment would require a remedy other than suppression of speech, such as a disclaimer. The First Amendment protects similar titles against confusion claims where the speaker provides means to distinguish the works. See Cliffs Notes, 886 F.2d at 496; Yankee Publ’g Inc. v. News America Publ’g Inc., 809 F. Supp. 267, 279-80 (S.D.N.Y. 1992).

⁷ Even when courts have performed a “quick look” Polaroid analysis, they have been clear that the likelihood of confusion must be “particularly compelling” to outweigh the First Amendment interests in artistic expression. See Twin Peaks, 996 F.2d at 1379.

The First Amendment basis of Rogers explains why the rule here must be strong: noncommercial speech is vulnerable to chilling effects. If the rule required extensive factfinding before upholding artistic freedom, then a trademark owner would be able to deter speech by the threat of a lawsuit, even an unsuccessful one. See William McGeeveran, The Imaginary Trademark Parody Crisis (and the Real One), 90 WASH L. REV. 713 (2015) (describing the prohibitive costs of going through litigation on likelihood of confusion, even when the defendant is likely to prevail).

C. Rothschild’s Sale of His Art Does Not Reduce its First Amendment Protection.

The fact that Rothschild sells his art is utterly unremarkable and legally irrelevant. In Rogers, the movie studio defendant sold the motion picture at issue.⁸ The Hangover Part II, the motion picture at issue in Louis Vuitton, had grossed “roughly $580 million globally as of the date of the complaint.” See 868 F. Supp. 2d at 174. Indeed, in every single case in which courts in the Second Circuit have applied Rogers, the defendant was selling its work. The same is overwhelmingly true in every other circuit, including in cases involving millions of dollars in revenue. See, e.g., MCA, 296 F.3d 894; Twentieth Century Fox, 875 F.3d 1192. Rogers applies because the challenged use is noncommercial speech—i.e., speech that does more than simply propose a commercial transaction. Bolger, 463 U.S. at 66. If speech is not “purely commercial”—that is, if it does more than propose a commercial transaction—then it is entitled to full First Amendment protection. Twentieth Century Fox, 875 F.3d at 1185-86 (cleaned up); see also Riley, 487 U.S. at 796.

⁸ A fact the Rogers court plainly recognized when it distinguished fully First Amendment-protected speech sold in the market from ordinary, non-speech commercial products. 875 F.2d at 998 (“the expressive element of titles requires more protection than the labeling of ordinary commercial products”).

As the Supreme Court has noted, noncommercial speech is often sold for profit. See, e.g., Brown v. Ent. Merch. Ass’n, 564 U.S. 786, 790 (2011) (video games); City of Lakewood v. Plain Dealer Publ’g Co., 486 U.S. 750, 756 n.5 (1988) (citing Pittsburgh Press Co. v. Pittsburgh Comm’n on Human Rel., 413 U.S. 376, 385 (1973)) (“Of course, the degree of First Amendment protection is not diminished merely because the newspaper or speech is sold rather than given away.”); Smith v. California, 361 U.S. 147, 150 (1959) (“It is of course no matter that the dissemination [of books] takes place under commercial auspices.”). Selling videogames, movies, or books is a profitable business, but Rogers and the cases that apply it make clear that all of these types of expressive works get full First Amendment protection. The First Amendment limits the reach of the Lanham Act in all these cases because the expression is what is being sold—the expression is what makes these things valuable to audiences—rather than merely being advertising for a separate product.

So too here: Rothschild is selling digital artworks, not physical handbags, just as Andy Warhol sold the 32 paintings in his “Campbell’s Soup Cans” series, not physical cans of soup. Rothschild’s “MetaBirkins,” like Warhol’s “Campbell’s Soup Cans,” attract audiences because of the creative expression they contain, not because they are useful for carrying lipstick or can be eaten for lunch.

Nor does the fact that Rothschild is using a new technological mechanism to authenticate his art change the fact that he's selling art. An NFT is merely code that points to a digital asset. See p. 3, supra. As Hermès' complaint inconsistently acknowledges, the NFT is not the digital artwork; it is code that points to a place where the associated digital image can be found, and that authenticates that image. *Id.*⁹ Rothschild's use of NFTs to sell his artworks here thus is no different than selling limited edition prints. See, e.g., Walking Mountain, 353 F.3d 792; cf. ETW, 332 F.3d at 937 (protecting artwork featuring Tiger Woods under Rogers where associated promotional material described the content of the work using the name "Tiger Woods"). Using an NFT to authenticate an artwork no more makes the artwork a "commodity" unprotected by the First Amendment, see Compl. ¶ 2, than does selling numbered copies of physical paintings make those paintings commodities for purposes of Rogers.

Likewise, the fact that buyers may later transfer ownership of a "MetaBirkins" artwork by reselling the NFT associated with it (which, again, is not the art itself but merely code pointing to the digital image) changes nothing. If a museum sold exclusive viewing access to a painting by requiring physical tokens in order to enter the room where the painting was located, those tokens might become "commodities" in the sense of being transferable for money, just as CDs of "Barbie Girl" or DVDs of Ginger and Fred are transferable for money. See MCA, 296 F.3d 894; Rogers, 875 F.2d 994. The transferability of access to a work has no effect on the First Amendment status and protection of the artwork itself. In other words, that NFTs could be associated with actual handbags, Compl. ¶ 2, does not make Rothschild's NFTs non-artistic any more than the existence of other types of authentication documents means that art, handbags, and real estate are the same for constitutional purposes. Hermès does not allege that the relevant NFTs are linked to anything other than Rothschild's artwork.

⁹ Of course, if the NFTs did contain the images, then they would be directly analogous to the film in Rogers, and Hermès' claims just as straightforwardly defective.

Neither the marketability of copies of artwork nor the particular technological means of authenticating that artwork are legally meaningful. Hermès has not pleaded any facts about the technology of NFTs that changes the well-settled law governing expressive works.

III. EVEN IF ROGERS DID NOT APPLY, DASTAR WOULD BAR HERMÈS' INFRINGEMENT CLAIMS HERE

Even if Rogers were not directly on point and dispositive in this case—which it is—the Supreme Court's decision in Dastar Corp. v. Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp., 539 U.S. 23 (2003), would be fatal to Hermès' claims here. Hermès' fundamental complaint is that consumers will believe Rothschild's MetaBirkins artworks are sponsored by or affiliated with Hermès. Specifically, Hermès complains that, because Rothchild depicts Birkin bags and calls his art MetaBirkins, consumers will believe that Hermès is the origin of the artwork, or that Hermès has some relationship with the art project.

That claim is barred by Dastar, which unambiguously holds that only misrepresentations of the origin of physical goods are actionable under the Lanham Act. 539 U.S. at 37. Other sorts of misrepresentations, including but not limited to misrepresentations of the origin of creative content, are not actionable. See id. (holding that “origin of goods” as used in the Lanham Act refers only to “the producer of the tangible goods that are offered for sale, and not to the author of any idea, concept, or communication embodied in those goods”). The MetaBirkins artworks are communicative goods that Dastar places outside the scope of the Lanham Act. To the extent that they have physical existence, Hermès does not allege that the NFTs and the associated URLs identifying where the MetaBirkins images are hosted misrepresent their own physical origin. The alleged confusion comes only from the content and title of the intangible MetaBirkins artworks.

Dastar was decided in 2003, after the Second Circuit's decision in Rogers and several subsequent decisions applying Rogers more broadly to artistic works. But many of the cases resolved under the Rogers framework in this Circuit also implicate Dastar in that they all involved allegations that consumers would be confused about the origin or sponsorship of creative content, rather than about who physically produced the goods at issue. See, e.g., Rogers, 875 F.2d at 997; Twin Peaks, 996 F.2d at 1378; AM General, 450 F. Supp. 3d at 482; Louis Vuitton, 868 F. Supp. 2d at 175.

The same is true here. Even without Rogers, the rule of Dastar is equally clear: confusion as to the origin of intangible creative content is not actionable under the Lanham Act.

IV. HERMÈS' TRADEMARK DILUTION CLAIMS MUST BE DISMISSED

A. Rogers Applies to Hermès' Dilution Claims.

Rothschild's First Amendment rights under Rogers preclude Hermès' dilution claims as well, especially given that dilution implicates no countervailing interest in consumer protection. See AM General, 450 F. Supp. 3d at 488 (dismissing AM General's federal and state dilution claims as barred by Rogers); Louis Vuitton, 868 F. Supp. 2d at 184 (dismissing Louis Vuitton's New York anti-dilution claim and common law unfair competition claim because those claims were based on the same permissible conduct as the Lanham Act claim); see also, e.g., Jackson v. Netflix, Inc., 506 F. Supp. 3d 1007, 1014 (C.D. Cal. 2020) (applying Rogers to all Lanham Act claims, including dilution).

B. Noncommercial Uses Do Not Dilute.

Even beyond Rogers and the First Amendment, the federal dilution statute, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(c)(3)(C) (2018), expressly excludes “noncommercial” uses. In doing so, the statute relies on the First Amendment’s definition of noncommercial speech, which extends to all expression that does more than simply propose a transaction, including the digital art at issue here. See section II(A), supra; MCA, 296 F.3d at 905-06 (interpreting statutory language that, while since reformulated, retains the “noncommercial” exemption unchanged and explaining that for-profit speech which is itself the product being sold is noncommercial).

State law dilution has the same limit, possibly as a matter of constitutional avoidance. See Louis Vuitton, 868 F. Supp. 2d at 184 (dismissing New York dilution and unfair competition claims against a fictional film where Rogers protected the film); Yankee Publ’g, 809 F. Supp. at 282 (“[T]he same First Amendment considerations that limit a cause of action under the Lanham Act apply also to a cause of action under New York law.”); see also L.L. Bean, Inc. v. Drake Publishers, Inc., 811 F.2d 26, 32 (1st Cir. 1987) (“It offends the Constitution . . . to invoke the [Maine] anti-dilution statute as a basis for enjoining the noncommercial use of a trademark by a defendant engaged in a protected form of expression.”).

C. Referential Uses Do Not Dilute.

Definitionally, dilution does not cover Rothschild’s use of “MetaBirkins” because his use is referential, rather than being commercial use as a separate mark for an unrelated good or service, as the Lanham Act requires. The Act defines dilution by blurring as the “association arising from the similarity between a mark or trade name and a famous mark that impairs the distinctiveness of the famous mark.” 15 U.S.C. § 1125(c)(2)(B) (2018). That definition requires that the defendant use the allegedly-diluting mark as a mark for distinct goods or services.¹⁰ The idea is that consumers are not confused by two similar marks such as Delta Dental and Delta Airlines, but the plaintiff's mark nonetheless is impaired because it becomes "less unique."

The analysis "must ultimately focus on whether an association, arising from the similarity between the subject marks, impairs the distinctiveness of the famous mark—that is, the ability of the famous mark to serve as a unique identifier." Louis Vuitton, 156 F. Supp. 3d at 434 (citing Starbucks Corp. v. Wolfe's Borough Coffee, Inc., 736 F.3d 198, 204 (2d Cir. 2013)) (cleaned up). When the defendant invokes a famous mark in reference to the products identified by the mark, this only tends to reinforce, rather than weaken, the distinctiveness of a mark, and there is no blurring. For example, where eBay used "Tiffany" without Tiffany's permission to advertise that it sold genuine Tiffany products, there was no second mark or product (no second "Tiffany") that would blur the connection between the "Tiffany" mark and Tiffany & Co. Thus, there was no dilution under state or federal law, even if some of the products on eBay were counterfeit. Tiffany (NJ) Inc. v. eBay Inc., 600 F.3d 93, 111-12 (2d Cir. 2010). Rothschild's uses are even more clearly referential. Rothschild uses the "MetaBirkins" name to refer to an artistic illustration of a Birkin bag. Far from being "dilutive," Rothschild's referential uses further reinforce the distinctiveness of Hermès' marks.

V. HERMÈS' OTHER CLAIMS HAVE THE SAME FATAL FLAWS

Rogers also bars all of Hermès' other causes of action, whether denominated in terms of infringement, dilution, "cybersquatting," or otherwise. If using an image of the Birkin bag is protected by the First Amendment when a claim is styled as a trademark cause of action, then merely changing the label on the cause of action cannot be enough to circumvent the First Amendment. As the Fourth Circuit has explained:

¹⁰ The statute therefore makes clear that use of "a mark or trade name" is not the core of dilution. Even for purely commercial products, a local ice cream store that advertised its own "Oreo ice cream" would not create a new meaning for Oreos; the meaning would remain linked to that of Oreos.

Congress left little doubt that it did not intend for trademark laws to impinge the First Amendment rights of critics and commentators. ... Congress directed that in determining whether an individual has engaged in cybersquatting, the courts may consider whether the person’s use of the mark is a “bona fide noncommercial or fair use.” 15 U.S.C. § 1125(d)(1)(B)(i)(IV). The legislature believed this provision necessary to “protect[] the rights of Internet users and the interests of all Americans in free speech and protected uses of trademarked names for such things as parody, comment, criticism, comparative advertising, news reporting, etc.”

Lamparello v. Falwell, 420 F.3d 309, 313-14 (4th Cir. 2005).

Here, every one of Hermès’ claims—federal trademark infringement, false designation of origin and false descriptions and representations, federal trademark dilution, cybersquatting, state dilution and injury to business reputation, common law trademark infringement, and state law misappropriation and unfair competition—focuses on the same speech that is protected under Rogers, which rejects the underlying premise of each claim that artistically relevant depictions of trademarks can be wrongful in the absence of explicit falsity.

For example, cybersquatting requires use of a domain name with a bad faith intent to profit. 15 U.S.C. § 1125(d)(1)(A)(i). Rothschild’s use of a domain name that is the title of his art project cannot be bad faith because that title is artistically relevant and not explicitly misleading. When Rogers applies to insulate the title of artwork, it must also apply to bar Hermès’ claims based on use of that title as a domain name for a site about the artwork. See Lamparello, 420 F.3d at 316 (“a court must evaluate an allegedly infringing domain name in conjunction with the content of the website identified by the domain name”); id. at 316 n.4 (“[I]t has long been established that even when alleged infringers use the very marks at issue in titles, courts look to the underlying content to determine whether the titles create a likelihood of confusion as to source”) (citing, inter alia, Rogers, 875 F.2d at 1000-01).

The same is true for other attempts by Hermès to relabel their claim here. See, e.g., Rogers v. Grimaldi, 695 F. Supp. 112, 117 (S.D.N.Y. 1988), aff'd, 875 F.2d 994 (2d Cir. 1989) (noting that Rogers’ §1125(a) claim was styled false designation of origin); cf. Parks LLC v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 863 F.3d 220, 227 (3d Cir. 2017) (rejecting false advertising claim that “depend[ed] upon the purported false association between [defendant’s] brand and [plaintiff’s] mark”); Jackson, 506 F. Supp. 3d at 1013 (applying Rogers to infringement, false designation, and dilution claims); Ebony Media Operations, LLC v. Univision Commc’ns Inc., No. 18-cv-11434-AKH, 2019 WL 8405265 (S.D.N.Y. June 3, 2019) (rejecting false advertising claim based on allegedly misleading use of plaintiff’s trademark in news reporting).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, Rothschild respectfully requests that the Court grant his motion to dismiss Hermès’ complaint in its entirety with prejudice pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 12(b)(6) for failure to state a claim.

Dated: February 9, 2022

Respectfully Submitted,

/s/ Rhett O. Millsaps II

Rebecca Tushnet

Rhett O. Millsaps II

Christopher J. Sprigman

LEX LUMINA PLLC

745 Fifth Avenue, Suite 500

New York, NY 10151

(646) 898-2055

rhett@lex-lumina.com

Attorneys for Defendant Mason Rothschild